California, First Day
Golden Hair and Black Hair
Biggest Ocean Is Quietest
Kidnaping Discouraged

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

LOS ANGELES, May 16—First day in California, devoted to motoring 150 miles over the Mojave Desert, the same distance north along the edge of the Pacific from Ventura and back again this morning.

William M. Packer meets the train, and does the driving, and has suddenly become indifferent to high speed. A sedate average of one mile a minute contents him, while he demonstrates car features, rather than speed. M. E. Coyle and W. E Holler, who supervise from afar, would be interested in the Packer methods. He seeks out stones half as big as his head and drives one front wheel over them. Then he finds bigger stones and drives the other front wheel over them. Next, at full speed, he dashes off the main road into the roughest, bumpiest kind of desert, with chuck holes, sage brush, clumps, sailing along at full speed. He winds up, his youthful face beaming:

"You didn't feel a jar, did you?"

On every possible occasion, putting on his gloves, or dark eyeglasses, he takes both hands off the wheel and leaves them off. Says he:

"This is shockless steering. No whipping of the wheel."

It's a pleasure "to visit" with the inhabitants of the desert, all so friendly. In the Victorville drugstore when you ask for root beer without any ice, the lovely big girl with yellow hair, replies, "You bet," and beams. That is all her vocabulary, "you bet," and beaming.

You stop at "The Green Spot," half a block from the drugstore. The purveyor of the "T-Bone" steaks, a young lady with jet black hair as permanently waved as the fur on a castiron Newfoundland dog, with beautiful eyebrows that run almost down to her ears and out-size grey eyes, says:

"Well, hello, boys. How are you all? I sure am glad to see you."

A sign back of her reads, in large letters:

"Steaks as tender as a woman's heart," and another sign, "Pies like mother tried to make."

It's a fine cool day in the desert, temperature only 96, not quite hot enough for maximum speed in alfalfa growing.

But recently the heat has been one hundred and five to one hundred and ten, which is better, and already Robert Hodge and his brother, Gilbert Hodge, have harvested and baled their first hay crops of the season and the alfalfa is hurrying toward a second crop. They don't watch for rain, for there isn't any, except perhaps half an inch in a year. They pump the water from the desert soil and expect eight crops this year, a hot enough desert sun permitting.

Rolling along the edge of the Pacific's gentle surf, its small waves scarcely breaking, you are reminded that the biggest man usually does little talking. Back of that quiet stretch of surf that runs a thousand miles along our Pacific ocean front door, there lies seven thousand miles of water. A little of it, falling as rain on the mountains to the east, will form streams and cataracts, of which the smallest will make more noise than that whole ocean.

The imagination is held by Byron's line:

"The mountains look on Marathon and Marathon looks upon the sea."

That is poetry, here in reality. You could bring those mountains and Marathon and that little Greek sea and all that part of Greece, dump them down on the edge of this ocean, and motorists would only say:

"Hello, another little real estate development. Who started that?"

William F. Gettle, recently kidnaped, is back with his family. Three of those that managed his kidnaping are in jail, have confessed and have been sentenced to life in prison. California does not like kidnapers.

The little girl, June Robles, Heaven be praised, is back with her family. She was found "in a shallow hole covered by cactus, chained by her ankles her clothes filthy and her body emanciated." She was too weak to walk or answer questions, and could only say, "I want mamma," to those that found her, nine miles from her home in Tucson, Arizona.

Her kidnapers have not been caught as this is written. There is, however, NO speculation

New England Battles World Court

STAY HOME, IS CRY TO SENATE

Civic and Business Chiefs in Protest to Foreign Tangle

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

Washington, May 16—A wave of patriotic protest against American adherence to the League of Nations, or the League Court, hit Washington today from New England.

New England statesmen, industrial and business leaders, war veterans and mothers told the Roosevelt government they want the United States to stay at home and take care of its own business.

The hearing against the World Court was held before the Senate foreign relations committee. Patriotic people from every corner of the country jammed the hearing room. The New England people were conspicuous by their personal presence and by letters and telegrams urging the United States to steer clear of foreign alliances.

Gov. Joseph B. Ely declared in a letter to the committee that "We have enough domestic problems at home to command our attention. Our people need to be employed. Our industries need to be revived. Our financial structure needs to be strengthened and placed upon a secure basis. Our foreign trade needs to be expanded.

"We should confine our attentions to these grave matters at home without the waste of time and the danger to our political security that would be the result

Captains Tell of Crash

New York, May 16—Two captains, one master of the giant White Star liner Olympic, and the other of the Nantucket lightship—today told how the liner crashed into the lightship off Nantucket yesterday with the loss of seven lives.

After 30 hours on the bridge of the Olympic, Capt. J. W. Binks said he thought he was five miles away from the Nantucket as he picked his way along fog-covered waters.

The story of Capt. George Braithwaite of the Nantucket described the suddenness of the crash and the short but fierce fight against death in the sea.

Capt. Braithwaite is a resident of Kirkland st., Cambridge.

Weary from the strain of 80 hours on the bridge of the Olympic, Capt. Binks told the Associated Press what happened when his ship sunk the Nantucket.

He believed the lightship to be five miles away and well off his starboard bow just before the collision occurred, he said, after he had docked his ship.

"The fog was in patches," he said. "We were going at reduced speed. Sometimes we could see for miles, and then not at all. We used the radio beacon to keep the lightship on our starboard side instead of ahead."

COURSE IS CHANGED

Eight minutes before the collision occurred, Capt. Binks was notified that the light-ship's foghorn could be heard. Accordingly, he said, he ordered the Olympic's speed further reduced.

"When we were getting toward the lightship we were only going two or three knots," he explained. "We heard her fog signal on the starboard bow and changed our

Deputy Registrar Bill Is Approved

The Senate today reconsidered its action in rejecting the Sullivan bill setting up deputy motor vehicle registrars in Pittsfield and Worcester and on a roll call vote, 15 to 14, passed the measure to be engrossed and sent it to the House.

This is the bill over which Registrar of Motor Vehicles Morgan T. Ryan and Senator John S. Sullivan of Worcester quarreled during a committee hearing.

POLICE ERROR ON MURTON IS BARED

BULLETIN

Dedham Courthouse, May 16—Murton Millen often took his bed apart, put the spring against a wall and slept with his feet up in the air and his head down on the floor, a witness at his trial testified in the afternoon session today as another contention Millen is insane.

Dedham Courthouse, May 16—Glaring errors in the records of the Boston police department barred them as evidence today at the trial of Abe Faber and Murton and Irving Millen.

The new turn came in the midst of testimony by which the Millen brothers hope to prove themselves insane and in which a former girl friend told of a prediction by the 23-year-old Murton that he would die at 25, and a boyhood chum related how they shrieked with glee at electric shocks.

The police records were introduced by Lieut. James T. Sheehan, of Boston police, who was called by the Millen counsel, Atty. George Stanley Harvey, to tell of a disappearance from home made by Murton three years ago.

"Just a minute," shouted Dist.-Atty. Edmund R. Dewing, after Lieut. Sheehan had testified under direct examination that the police department had located Murton.

An inspection of the record followed and disclosed that the name was carried throughout as "Martin Millan." Judge Brown ordered the record excluded and all testimony of Lieut. Sheehan thrown out. The latter was then excused.

Murton's grim prophecy of death was given to Miss Frieda Sirgas, pretty, 22-year-old brunette, she testified.

PILOT BLOCKS AIR SUICIDE

By Associated Press

Muncie, Ind., May 16—A struggle 2000 feet in the air halted the attempt of Regis L. Schwer, 19, to commit suicide by jumping from an airplane late yesterday. Raymond Williams, pilot, left the controls of his plane to beat Schwer into unconsciousness.

Noticing the youth with one foot on the wing of the ship, Williams set his ship in a glide, grabbed a fire extinguisher and struck Schwer on the head. The pilot struggled for three minutes to get the inert body into the front cockpit.

The plane was but 500 feet up when Williams again took the controls.

Landing at the airport, Schwer told officers he had been brooding over low scholastic marks. Police, however, said they believed the youth was despondent over a love affair.

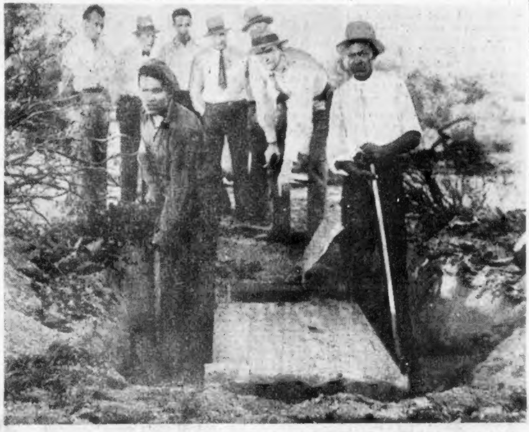
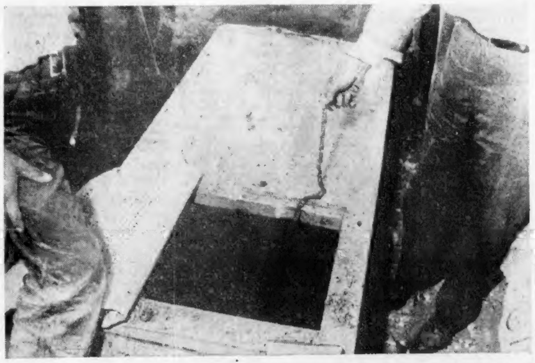
June's 'Coffin' Dug Up From Horror Pit



Laborers dig the "coffin box" from the grave Tucson, Ariz., where June Robles, 6, was held captive under the merciless desert sun for 19 days and 19 bitterly cold nights. There in the loneliness of a mesquite and cactus wilderness the little girl nearly perished.



This is the "coffin box" and the chain that held the little girl through nearly three weeks of agony. She dared not cry, for her abductors warned her "that will mean a knife stuck in your back." (Picture by International Photograph Service.)

Tucson, Ariz., May 16—Speeding the great nation-wide manhunt for the kidnapers of June Robles, a Department of Justice finger-print expert arrived today by airplane from Washington to examine the "torture coffin" in which the little victim was chained for 19 days in the desert.

Following an examination of the fingerprints, the "torture coffin" will be placed on display at the Plaza to give the public an opportunity to identify construction materials in an effort to determine their origin.

JUNE GAINING STRENGTH

While more than 1000 men, including skilled Indian trackers, engaged in a vast and dramatic manhunt for the fiends who tortured the school girl in a hot desert hellhole, Dr. Meade Clyne, who examined June following her rescue, said she was making a good recovery.

"June has a fine constitution and evidences a wonderful reserve strength, which made possible her survival of the harrowing experience in a comparatively robust condition," Dr. Clyne said.

Dr. Clyne and others who questioned the little girl said she insists she passed the entire 19 days she was missing in the "torture coffin."

"LYNCH LAW" LOOMS

Discovery of what was believed to have been the abductors' hideout close to where June was buried alive, served to spur the constantly spreading manhunt, and rumors were current that one or more suspects already were being questioned.

Threats of "Lynch Law" mounted as Arizona's hard-riding, gun-toting cowboys joined forces with officers in the hunt for the torture kidnapers.

As officers pieced together the weird story of her kidnaping and 19-day imprisonment in a lonely desert trench, authorities indicated her description of two men who visited her during the time she was chained in her prison might lead to their apprehension.

She was rescued late Monday by her uncle, Carlos G. Robles, assistant Pima county attorney, and County Atty. Clarence Houston, who were directed to the spot by an anonymous letter from Chicago.

Ironically enough, June's father, Fernando Robles, had been led

NEW ENGLAND LEADS DRIVE TO KEEP U. S. OUT OF LEAGUE

WAVE OF PROTEST AGAINST COURT REACHES CAPITAL

Democrats and Republicans Join Protest to Administration; Lodge Warns of Peril; Address by Curley

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

of our adherence to the World Court."

Ex-Senator James A. Reed of Missouri was the first of the witnesses, and he charged that the campaign for American adherence is a move financed by the Carnegie Foundation "to force the United States into the League of Nations through the back door."

LODGE SENDS PROTEST

Republicans vied with Democrats in their attack upon the scheme to dump the United States into the League Court.

Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., whose distinguished grandfather was for many years the chairman of the Senate foreign relations committee, sent a striking letter of protest in which he declared:

"My own view is that the United States should bend all its energies toward achieving peace for the United States instead of trying to reform war-torn Europe. This is a more attainable goal and one which, in the long run, will promote the peace of the world."

Atty.-Gen. Joseph E. Warner of Massachusetts declared in a letter to the committee:

"The people of America want peace. If the League of Nations and the World Court held the slightest assurance of peace, the people would acclaim both, but neither offers peace; both make dissension a certainty. Certainly, the League was founded on, if it is not dominated today, as I believe it is, by violence and hate among European nations. The Court is its lackey.

CURLEY MAKES SPEECH

"I urge you not to fly in the face of the solid and substantial sentiment of the American people. I ask you not to scorn their desires for peace by forcing the United States into the League of Nations through the World Court."

Ex-Mayor James M. Curley, in a brilliant speech to the committee, asserted that America has enough troubles which now bear it down, to the distress and suffering of its own people, without seeking to bear the burdens of the world upon its tired shoulders. Political pacts, based upon greed and envy and malice, make for war—for war certain to engulf the American people in the future unless they avoid the possibility of it now, he said, by remaining aloof from the League Court.

"This is the most important question before the Congress of the United States," Ex-Senator Reed told the committee. "If a mistake is made, there is no mind capable of prophesying the results of that mistake."

SEES BACK DOOR ENTRANCE

Reed declared the "proponents of this measure are the proponents of the League of Nations."

"This is the back dor through which they hope to seek an entrance into the league," he added.

The Carnegie Foundation had "financed the propaganda," both for the league and for the court, Reed said, and added that friends of the court were spending huge sums to influence the Senate.

"With the money at their command, any one could get up 10,000 organizations to oppose the world court," Redd said. "You know how easy it is to send telegrams with somebody else's money.

"There is a well-financed effort to pull down the American flag and substitute an international rag."

The Missourian denied that the country was "aflame" for the World Court. He said if the proposal should be submitted to the people of Missouri, it would be voted down 10 to 1 and that the opinion in the remainder of the nation is similar.

CITES CHINESE OUTRAGE

Consent of the council or the assembly of the League of Nations would be necessary for adjudication of American claims in the World Court, Reed said.

"The rape of Manchuria stands unchallenged and unstopped by the League of Nations," Reed asserted.

At one point Reed described the world court as "the putrid vermiform appendix of the League of Nations," the judges as "the political representatives of their nations."

Reed said America had gone into Europe in a "war to end war." He added he had merely made the "world safe for dictators, monsters and for infamy in government."

'We poured our blood on the fields of France and today France is our enemy and repudiates her debts," he continued.

"We stood on the battle line with the British and they still say we did not do our full duty because we did not come sooner.

"We haven't a real friend in Europe. The European nations are ready to join in any enterprise in which they can gain money or honor at the expense of the United States.

"Let us keep out of this European trap."

State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley of Massachusetts declared:

"We went into one of these wars, a war to end war. We did not end war. We paid dearly in blood and money. We loaned the European nations money when they needed it for their own preservation. We saved them from defeat, and they have defaulted, refusing to repay the money they owe us at a time when the American people have been in economic distress.

"Out of these experiences, we should determine to keep aloof from the League of Nations and the World Court because these organizations have neither prevented the recurrence of war nor manifested any ability or desire to eliminate the causes of war. We should determine to look after our own country."

APPEAL FROM DORR

Frank A. Dorr, president of Raymond's Inc., one of the foremost merchandising organizations in the Northeast, said in part in a letter to the committee:—

"We made one such venture. We were drawn into one war which was not of our creation. We have had nothing but trouble from it since.

"Here in New England we have a serious regard for American history and a high respect for our great statesmen of Colonial days who won independence for this country, who devised the American Constitution and who left to us the great heritage of freedom. They advised us to steer clear of foreign political alliances and entanglements. They spoke to us out of a great wisdom."

Charles F. Adams of First National Stores, Inc., made one of the most eloquent addresses to the committee against American adherence to the League Court. In the course of his speech, Mr. Adams said:

"We intuitively have sensed, and now firmly believe, that some, if not many, other countries are hotbeds of tricky diplomacy, are quite distrustful of neighboring nations and suspicious of many racial and national groups, far distant from their frontiers.

"We believe that any participation, interference with or even advice to nations in such state of mind, is bound to displease or antagonize and that obligating our nation to such a policy might well destroy what goodwill we now have in foreign lands and any pleasant and profitable relationships that we might develop in the future."

E. C. Smith, now past eighty, the oldest living ex-Governor of Vermont, wrote to the committee that he was the war governor in the Spanish-American War and his father the war governor during the Civil War. He has felt responsibility for the lives of American young men. He said they must not be sacrificed on foreign battlefields again.

DANA OPPOSES LEAGUE

From Edward Dana, general manager of the Boston Elevated Railway, the committee received the following letter in part:

"With due appreciation of the economic interdependence of the Nations on the face of the globe, nevertheless I believe we can conduct ourselves with dignity and due regard for the rights of our neighbors without becoming entangled in a procedure which has thus far not proven its soundness."

Department Commander Daniel J. Doherty of the American Legion for Massachusetts sent a protest against the League of Nations and the League Court, "either with or without reservations," as did Justice Herbert E. Holmes of the Maine Superior Court.

William H. O'Brien, past president of the Boston Central Labor Union; Mrs. Emily A. Dexter, president of the American Legion Auxiliary for the State of Maine, and Attorney James L. Doyle, who has been State adjutant of the Maine American Legion since its inception, were others from New England whose opposition to the World Court was recorded.

QUICK JUSTICE JAILS GETTLE 3 FOR LIFE

Fate of Women in Plot Undecided; Crowds Ransack Hideout

By International News Service

A re-enactment of the Gettle kidnaping for the microphone with William F. Gettle playing himself, is announced for WAAB at 11 o'clock tonight, to originate from Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, May 16—Meting out punishment with a swiftness that boded ill for the 'snatch racket" the law today ended the free careers of the three kidnapers of William F. Gettle, millionaire financier.

Scarcely 24 hours after they were captured, and Gettle was released unharmed and without payment of the $60,000 ransom demanded, Roy Williams, Jimmy Kirk and Larry Kerrigan pleaded guilty to kidnaping and were sentenced to life imprisonment.

The "snatchers" were given two alternatives after they confessed—plead guilty and accept life imprisonment with no hope of a parole, or fight the case and face the strong possibility of ending up on the gallows of grim San Quentin.

The three preferred the certainty of life behind the bars to the uncertainty of death at the end of a rope.

DEPENDED ON HURTS

California law makes life imprisonment the maximum in kidnapings save where the victim suffered physical harm, and in this case the death penalty can be meted out. Because Gettle was painfully injured when he was rolled over the wall of his Arcadia ranch by his abductors, it was considered very likely that the state could have secured the extreme penalty.

To secure the rapid sentencing of the three confessed kidnapers, District Attorney Buron Fitts laid the evidence before a hastily convened night session of the Grand Jury and secured the necessary indictments.

The three men were then taken rapidly before Superior Judge Charles Fricke, pleaded guilty, and heard the sentence.

What disposition will be made of the two women associates of the three gun-toting ex-bootlegger kidnapers, — Loretta Moody and Joan Burke—has not yet been decided.

SOUVENIR FANS RAMPAGE

From the hall of justice, from Gettle's Beverly Hills mansion, from the Arcadia estate where he was kidnaped, the crowds strayed today to the tiny Spanish type house in La Crescenta where he was held captive.

Souvenir seekers all, they invaded the property, making away with whatever could be torn loose, mostly roses and rose bushes.

Vines that covered the kitchen windows came down before the hands of the curious. In the kitchen the crowds found evidence of the hand-to-mouth living of the kidnapers—no board set for royalty, although $60,000 was sought.

MAYOR WARNS OF PAY BILL

Thousands of city employes will be compelled to take payless furloughs and many will be discharged from the municipal service if the Legislature enacts a bill to compel the mayor to restore one-third of the wage cut now in existence for such workers, Mayor Mansfield warned today.

Referring to the action of the State Senate yesterday in voting for such a bill, the mayor said:

"I am confident that this bill will not be enacted this year and that the members of the general court will surely reach theh conclusion that this bill will not be i. the interest of city and county employes.

"Those who are urging its passage are not the real friends of such employes. In truth they are their enemies."

Mansfield Welare Bill Is Defeated

A bill filed by Mayor Mansfield calling for a reorganization of the Boston Welfare department with a paid commissioner instead of the present unpaid board was reported adversely today by the Legislature Committee on Cities.

Indictments Loom In New Bank Data

New Indictments loomed today in Attorney-General Warner's probe of defunct banks when Assistant Attorney-General Jennie Loitman Barron went before the Suffolk County Grand Jury.

While no inkling of the evidence could be learned, it was said that the grand jury heard data which may result in the indictment of several banking officials.

Petition Filed To Disbar Gobron

A petition asking the disbarment of Atty. Louis C. Gobron, now serving a term in Charles st. jail, was filed today in Supreme Court by the Boston Bar Association.

Bonanza Banking

By ROBERT H. HEMPHILL
Financial Authority

The monetary legislation which is now before Congress is not just an abstract question to be argued about.

It is the most vital and important matter before the American nation.

We have only a comparatively small amount of permanent money in actual active circulation. Usually one to two billions of dollars. One or two billions in Europe, the balance hoarded.

As a synthetic substitute for money, we have been using BANK DEPOSITS for our principal medium of exchange—demand deposits—the proceeds of commercial bank loans.

This great revolving fund of bank deposits—27 billion dollars in 1929, has been progressively diminished by the payment of bank loans, until the total is now around 16 billion dollars.

We are doing just as much business with this 16 billion dollars as is possible with the facilities of our present state of civilization.

The loose screw in our economic system is that this working capital upon which we have to depend absolutely is not permanently in circulation. It is loaned temporarily and has to be repaid.

Payment of bank loans contracts the volume of this synthetic money, and necessarily business diminishes proportionately.

When business diminishes, we have a depression, which no one seems to understand because it is so simple.

We can increase deposits only by depositing currency or the proceeds of bank loans.

Bank deposits cannot now be increased by the proceeds of loans because under their new ideas of the extension of credit, the banks cannot make short term capital loans which formerly built up 95 per cent of this great revolving fund of credit deposits—this synthetic money; therefore, the amount of permanent currency in circulation must be increased.

Also, if we are to have a banking system which will not freeze up again periodically, demand deposits must be kept in cash 100 per cent.

Let's quit dodging the issue. THE DAYS OF BONANZA BANKING ARE OVER.

If we are to progress rationally we cannot permit a small group who are themselves largely bewildered, to accidentally and unsafely expand the volume of synthetic money at their pleasure, creating periods of wild and uncontrolled inflation, and immediately thereafter frantically and suddenly contract this volume of synthetic money and create these recurring periods of disastrous and tragic depression.

Surely any sane man can see that it is economic suicide to continue to rely upon an erratic and uncontrolled mechanism which periodically has to destroy commerce and industry to preserve itself.

We must replace this wildly fluctuating synthetic money with a permanent currency properly calculated upon the basis of our population, with fixed provision for increase according to the increase in population and our proven ability to digest a definite progressive elevation in the standard of living.

Pinchot Loses in Primary; Hints Fight at Polls

By Associated Press

Philadelphia, May 16 —. After Senator David A. Reed had rolled up a majority of more than 100,000 in two-thirds of the state, Gov. Gifford Pinchot today conceded defeat in his effort to win the Republican nomination for senator.

Blaming his defeat largely on ill health which prevented him from making a tour of the state, the governor, who twice before had been defeated in his effort to enter the Senate, left what political observers looked upon as an intimation that he may try again at the general election in the fall.

If he runs it will be on an independent ticket against Reed on the Republican ticket and Joseph F. Guffy, the Democratic nominee.

Pinchot and Reed fought out the campaign for the nomination largely on the Roosevelt issue. The governor is a staunch Roosevelt supporter, while Reed opposes the new deal.

Newark, N. J., May 16 (AP)—State Motor Vehicle Commissioner Harold G. Hoffman had a plurality of over 125,000 today in the Republican gubernatorial primary election contest, with only 164 of the state's 3418 election districts unreported.

U. S. Senator Hamilton F. Kean was assured of the Republican renomination over James G. Blauvelt.

The gubernatorial vote was: Hoffman, 229,491; Emerson Richards, 48,384; Robert Carey, 74,118; Joseph Wolber, 73,916.

The Democratic gubernatorial vote was: Judge William Dill, 103,249; Theron McCampbell, 18,717.

1000 JOIN HUNT FOR GIRL'S KIDNAPERS

nightly unwittingly near his daughter' hiding place while following contact instructions contained in a second ransom note; and authoritises believe the kidnapers sought to lead him to the girl because they were afraid to negotiate further for the $15,000 ransom they demanded.

The contact never was made.

The letter from Chicago and another sent to Tucson authorities from the New Mexico penitentiary remained important clues to the girl's kidnapers. The New Mexico letter, written by an unnamed convict, was forwarded by Warden Ed Swope.

PLOT ON NOTABLES

It disclosed an asserted plot to kidnap Congresswoman Isabella Greenway or Budget Director Lewis Douglas but authorities were interested more because it made reference of a spot in the desert the approximate distance from Tucson that June was found.

Authorities meanwhile studied utensils found in the trench with June for fingerprints which might compare with those they hoped to find on the Chicago letter.

Instructions of the first ransom note, delivered to Fernando Robles two hours after June was kidnaped April 25, were revealed by authorities. The note threatened death to the child if instructions were not carried out.

"You must follow this," the father was told. "Get a car as told, put a sack in the seat, and drive the route until you come to a white cloth being dragged across the road in front of your car, then you pitch the sack of money ($15,000 in $5, $10 and $20 bills) right at the cloth beside the road.

"Don't stop, don't speak, don't change or dim your lights, don't blow your horn, don't give any signal, drive slow, be alone, don't have a gun. . . . Tell the officers to let you alone."

IN PIT OF HORRORS

The second note extended the route outside Tucson where the father was to drive so it passed the point 9½ miles southeast of the city where the girl was found, but no one ever came forward to contact him during his dreary trips which he made from 9 p. m. to 4 a. m. each night.

June's torturous hideaway, where she spent 19 days beneath a blistering desert sun, was visited by her mother and father and her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Bernabe Robles.

"Dios," murmured the grandmother as she stepped about the shallow trench.

"Let us go," she said. "The heat, the people, the loneliness I feel here makes the heart fast. I want to go back to my June, so my arms know she is safe."

"June is so quiet," she said sadly. "Weeks it will take her her to recover. Her body is simply roasted from being shut in that awful box with the sun beating down, and her forehead has sores, from eating mouldy food, the doctors say. Her leg is so sore."

June's ankle was painfully bruised by the chain which bound her to a stake in the trench.

"CRY AND YOU DIE"

But the little girl didn't cry while held in the grave-like hole. The kidnapers said "they would put a knife in her back if she cried," the grandmother related.

Excitement today dimmed for June some of the suffering she endured while held captive. From far-away London a newspaper interviewed her by telephone. She assured the paper she was all right, and what she couldn't tell, her father, who held her on his knee, added. Then there were the cameramen, for whom she posed obligingly, and the newspapermen, whose many questions she answered readily.

RICH MAN FLEES 2 KIDNAPERS

By Associated Press

San Antonio, Tex., May 16—Leaping from his auto after he had been held captive for more than an hour, Grover C. Cain, wealthy owner of a string of filling stations, today escaped from two abductors whose announced purpose, he said, was kidnaping for ransom.

Cain leaped from his car when one of the abductors struck him over the head with a pistol. He was bruised and shaken up. The abductors righted the careening machine and drove away in the car as Cain ran to a nearby residence for aid.

Cain said he had stepped into his auto to drive home when the two of them held a pistol on him

CAPT. POND AND SABELLI PLAN RETURN HOP FROM ITALY

ROME TAKEOFF SCHEDULED IN 48 HOURS

Jump From Ireland on Way Back; Il Duce Wires Praise

Lahinch, Ireland, May 16—Plans for a round-trip flight to Rome and then a return transatlantic hop from Ireland to New York were announced today by Capt. George R. Pond, former Boston, Mass., flier, and Lieut. Cesare Sabelli.

They hope by this performance to retrieve any honors that may have escaped them through their forced landing on the attempted non-stop flight to Italy.

Early this afternoon such progress had been made on the repairing of their plane that they believed there was a good possibility of getting away for Rome within 48 hours.

Premier Mussolini of Italy today telegraphed his congratulations to the fliers.

TROUBLE SOON APPEARED

The fliers "missed death by inches," as they flew over the Atlantic, fighting leaking gasoline and a smoking, coughing engine, they revealed after cracking up their big monoplane Leonardo da Vinci near her.

Lieut. Sabelli told of the horrors of the ocean crossing.

"After leaving Newfoundland, our first trouble developed. The gasoline was not flowing freely from the rear tank to the carburetor. This gradually got worse and we lost all hope of reaching land.

"It was either a case of going ahead or turning back to Newfoundland or New York. We decided to take the risk and go ahead.

"After about 23 hours of blind flying," he said, "trouble developed with the engine. We lowered the plane and at first thought of attempting to alight in the sea. Fortunately, the trouble was cleared up." This was about 400 miles from Ireland.

POND SAVED LIFE

The lieutenant credited Pond with saving their lives on another occasion.

"The gasoline choked, but Pond left the cockpit, climbed out to the reserve tank and cleared the flow. Otherwise, we would have been forced down in the Atlantic."

Capt. Pond frankly said it was the "worst experience" he ever had.

Capt. Pond turned down the best Irish whiskey in town last night.

The hotel proprietor offered him and his partner, Lieut. Cesare Sabelli, a nightcap after their flight across the Atlantic.

"All I want," said Pond, "is sleep."

Sabelli, however, accepted a "few good drinks."

"Stout stuff!" he said.

FARMERS URGED TO POPULARIZE N. E. PRODUCTS

California Methods Cited at Meeting of Council, Producers

More than 100 agricultural producers gathered with state agricultural agents and commodity group executives in the Statler to discuss a program for the better marketing of the products of New England fields and orchards. The sessions, which will continue tomorrow, are being held under the auspices of the New England Council.

A number of speakers, among them Dr. Willard A. Munson, of Massachusetts State College, and Harry R. Lewis, of Providence, chairman of the Council's agricultural committee, urged that the New England agrarians steal a page from the book of their California brethren.

They proposed that New England cranberries and apples and potatoes be standardized and branded just like California oranges. There is no reason, they pointed out, why these products should not bear "Made in New England" labels.

The foundations for the co-operation necessary for such an intensive marketing plan, the speakers said, have already been laid in the New England states.

STORK AWAITED BY CLARA BOW

By Associated Press

Hollywood, May 16—Clara Bow and Rex Bell announced today they expected a baby next December.

The famous red-head of the screen indicated she may be about ready to carry out her oft-repeated threat to retire from films completely and settle down to a family fireside.

The announcement came through Bell from the desert ranch of the couple near Nipton.

The actress talked of raising a family last Christmas after she had brought her twin cousins, John and Lillian, here from their Brooklyn home for a visit. She said that was her finest Christmas.

RESCUE STORY TOLD BY MANY ON OLYMPIC

Graphic Accounts of Sea Crash Given by Passengers

New York, May 16—The officers and crew of the Olympic did everything possible to save the men catapulted into the sea when the White Star liner rammed and sank the Nantucket Shoals lightship in the fog off Nantucket Island yesterday morning, passengers on the liner told International News Service today in graphic accounts of the disaster.

The crew immediately threw life preservers to members of the lightship's crew, swimming in the water, and lifeboats were lowered quickly to pick them up, according to two passengers who witnessed the rescue efforts.

WHISTLES ARE HEARD

John De Freitas, agent for American automobile companies in British Guiana, who was on deck before the crash, said:

"The time of the crash I was on the Olympic's promenade deck, standing on the starboard side. The fog was extremely thick. About 10 minutes before the collision we slowed down, because another boat passed too closely, I suppose. There were a lot of whistles blowing.

"I was trying to look through the fog to get a glimpse of one of the ships that was blowing its horn. Suddenly, almost dead ahead, I heard a whistle which I learned later was the whistle of the Nantucket. The Olympic immediately reversed her engines. Then there was a crash.

SHOWER OF DEBRIS

"The superstructure of the lightship became entangled with the structur at the bow of the Olympic. There was a regular shower of debris.

"The lightship went down in less than three minutes. I saw men swimming—two of them.

"When the crash occurred, four people were on the promenade deck. A second after the crash, members of the crew and passengers came out on deck. The crew threw life preservers to the men in the water. Everything was orderly.

"Then the crew of the Olympic lowered the lifeboats. I saw the lifeboats pick up one man. They seemed to have a lot of trouble getting him in the boat. This held them up so it delayed them getting to others who were swimming."

Martin Munkozic, photographer for a New York magazine, was in the Olympic's recreation room when the collision occurred. He said:

"I came on deck less than thirty seconds after the crash. It was very foggy. Isaw half of the lightship, that had been cut in two, float astern and then sink. I also could see two bodies floating face down."

NEW KARLSRUHE STORM OVER $400 FETE

Grossman Plans Fight Over Appropriation to Honor Guests

A new squall broke around the German cruiser Karlsruhe from the direction of Beacon Hill today, when it was learned that Gov. Ely had prepared an order, requesting the council to appropriate $400 for the entertainment of the Karlsruhe's complement.

Councillor Joseph B. Grossman of Quincy announced he would try to stop the order from reaching the council. Failing in that, he planned to oppose it vigorously.

Custom, however, dictates that the Commonwealth must entertain at least the officers of any foreign war vessel visiting the port. A dinner or formal ball is usually given in their honor.

News of the proposed snub to the Karlsruhe's men caused some indignation at the Navy Yard. One man there said rather pointedly:

"The Germans are the finest guests we've had in years. And they are behaving like perfect gentlemen in the face of a lot of petty annoyances. There ought to be an end to that sort of thing. It's not doing us much good."

Meanwhile, the police, tired of trying to decide whether the German man-of-war was the victim of a Red plot or a Crimson prank, released Allen Kellogg Philbrick, Harvard junior, whom they had arrested after he clogged the ship's ventilating mechanism with anti-Hitler propaganda.

O'DONNELL SAYS HE DIDN'T KNOW "KING" SHOT

"I Heard Guns and I Urged Others to Go," He Tells Jury

John T. O'Donnell, on trial in Suffolk Superior Court as an accessory after the fact of the murder of Charles ("King") Solomon, took the stand today in his own defense and denied he knew that any member of his group had robbed or shot Solomon or anyone else in the Cotton Club last January.

He admitted being at the club with James ("Skeets") Coyne, who is being tried for murder, and four other men.

"Four of our party left the table, leaving Johnny Moore and I alone," he testified. Later both of us went to the coatroom. I heard shots and I said, 'Lets' get out of here.'

"When we got to my car I saw the other four boys. I got in the seat and drove away with them. We started for South Boston, but changed our minds and headed for Roslindale where we were stopped by police. They searched my car and after showing my license and registration we headed for New York. I surrendered when I learned police were looking for me."

Before O'Donnell took the stand Judge Gibbs denied motions by each defendant for directed verdicts, requested on the grounds that the government had failed to prove its case.

TWO SHIP CAPTAINS TELL THEIR STORIES OF FATAL CRASH

course to port to make a greater allowance for safety.

"After an interval—about 3 minutes from the time we first heard her signal—the lookout on the bow warned us that the lightship was ahead. We stopped and then reversed full speed. When we were almost stopped we struck.

"It was not the speed of the Olympic but her weight that sank the lightship."

RADIO BEARING OFF

Capt. Binks said that his radio bearing with the lightship might have been two or three degrees off. He explained that he had changed his course slightly to avoid the shoals, that if he hadn't "hauled it over" the collision might not have occurred.

Radio directional beams, by means of which the light-ship guided the liner, were not altogether accurate, he said. Capt. Binks also asserted that the underwater oscillations "were not very good."

"The radio beams only gave us an approximate bearing," he explained. "We thought the lightship was three degrees off the starboard bow when I hauled away according to the radio beacon. If I had not hauled away we might have missed her, maybe by a ship's length, but I could not do that. I had to haul away from the danger."

Capt. Binks said he heard the lightship's fog signal twice. There were four officers on the bridge with him, he said, and they all thought it was off the starboard bow.

"But the fog fools a person sometimes," he added.

The three bodies of the victims of the Nantucket were removed from the Liner Olympic and taken to the Bellevue morgue.

At the lighthouse service headquarters, it was said the bodies would remain at the morgue until instructions about them arrived from the second district headquarters in Boston.

A huge throng of reporters and photographers boarded the Olympic near the Statue of Liberty as it steamed into the harbor this morning. In two rooms on the promenade deck they found the four survivors—Capt. Braithwaite, First Mate Clifton Mosher, Radio Operator John F. Perry and Laurent Robert, an oiler, all residents of Massachusetts.

"I was on the bridge of the lightship," said Captain Braithwaite, pulling meditatively at his pipe. "It was a few minutes before 11 o'clock yesterday morning. It was very foggy and we were keeping a sharp lookout.

"Suddenly I heard the horn of the Olympic — a deep blast. I could see her coming at us out of the fog.

"It all happened in a flash. I was knocked down when the Olympic crashed into us. I got up and I was knocked down again.

"The next thing I knew I was struggling in the water."

UNABLE TO SWIM

A wry smile flitted across captain Braithwaite's weather-beaten face.

"I can't swim," he confessed, ruefully. "But I did my level best. I found myself going down instead of staying up.

"As I tried to keep up I opened my mouth to yell. I found my mouth full of water. (laughing).

"There was a strong tide running. (The captain's face became serious again.) I got hold of a piece of driftwood."

The captain revealed the clarity of his mind in the stress of his plight by describing the driftwood minutely as follows:

"It was two feet six inches long, five inches wide and three-eighths of an inch thick.

"The driftwood didn't do me much good. I tried to move my legs but whenever I did my head would go under. Uncomfortable? Well, rather."

Capt. Braithwaite said that the Olympic meanwhile had quickly lowered lifeboats and sent men to the rescue.

"I saw a lifeboat going past," the cptain related. "I yelled. I didn't think they saw me. I was getting weak. I felt I was going down for the last time.

"So I consigned myself to God Almighty through Christ and laid myself right down.

"The next thing I knew I was in a lifeboat."

The Captain managed a smile. He remarked, dryly:

"I guess I did pretty well for an old bird of 69."

Occupying the same room with Captain Braithwaite was another of the four survivors — Clifton Mosher, the first mate.

"It was just like a big saw, a big saw working up an down," said Mosher. "It was all over in a minute. The Olympic cut us right in half and we went down.

"I was on one-half of our poor ship. The other boys were on the other half. We didn't have a chance."

Perry, the wireless operator, and Robert, the oiler—the other two survivors besides Braithwaite and Mosher—were in an adjoining room in a half-exhausted condition. Perry wore a blanket draped across his injured shoulders.

Three others who manned the Nantucket came in, too. They were the dead.

Four more bodies lie around the shoals where the ship went down.

"I think every man had a chance to get a life belt," said Mosher. "We were all on deck though it was a matter of seconds.

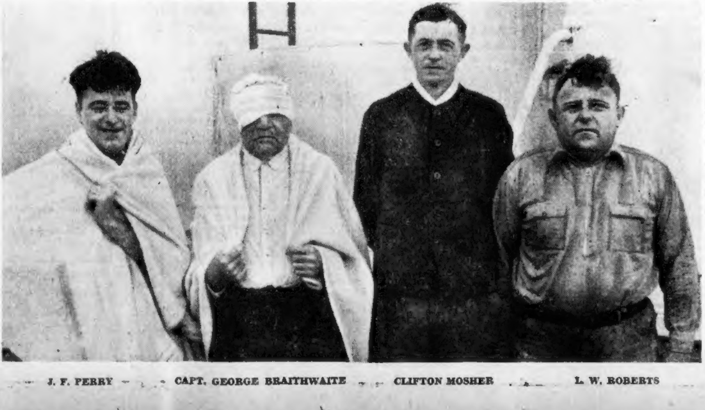
"We knew what was coming. We had been up against that sort of thing before.

"In a flash, she came out of the fog. Her prow was working up and down like a big saw. She struck us square amidships. We went down in less than a minute."

"Just before she hit, there was a feeling like a big wave in the winter time," said Mosher.

"There was a terrific suction. I never thought I was to come up. Some of my comrades never did."

Four Survivors of Nantucket Lightship Tragedy



J. F. PERRY — CAPT. GEORGE BRAITHWAITE — CLIFTON MOSHER — L. W. ROBERTS

Ship Probe in N. Y.; Captain Due Here Today

Inquiry into the cause of the fatal crash of the White Star liner Olympic into the Nantucket Lightship will take place in New York, according to Oscar G. Haines, head of the Boston steamboat inspectors.

"We have not been requested to investigate the crash; it is out of this jurisdiction. The inquiry will be in New York," he said.

Capt. George Braithwaite and the other three surviving members of the lightship crew will be called upon to give their version of the crash, and members of the liner's crew will give theirs.

The captain and his three men who lived to tell the story of the sea disaster are due at the South Station at 5:15 (D. S. T.) on the New Yorker.

Mrs. Braithwaite, wife of the lightship's captain, who never lost faith that her husband would return safe and sound, went to the station from her home in Kirkland st., Cambridge, to greet him.

Technical testimony regarding radio beams, which in this case led the liner through the fog directly into the lightship, will play a big part in the hearing.

A heavy fog along the Atlantic coast today delayed the Relief Ship No. 106 in reaching her station to take the place of the ill-fated Nantucket Lightship, according to a radio message received by Captain George Eaton, commander of the Lighthouse Service Base, Chelsea.

MURTON PREDICTED 'DEATH BY 25,' GIRL TESTIFIES

By WIN BROOKS

romance in the life of the youth now held for murder—and whom the government hopes to electrocute even before he reaches the age called by himself.

"Once, when I was out with him, he showed me the palm of his hand," Miss Siegan testified.

Cregg Seeks Action In Lynn Murder

"He said, 'See that line there? That's my life line and that means I'm going to live until I am about 25 or 26.'"

The scene she pictured was a homey one, that of a girl and her boy friend discussing their futures —but little dreaming that the details would be exposed at a trial of the boy for murder.

But Miss Siegan appeared for the defense, a defense that pleads the brothers, Murton and Irving, were insane. She told of her knowledge of both and carried a trace of a smile as she recounted under direct questioning of Atty. George Stanley Harvey a variety of idiosyncrasies by which Harvey hopes to prove his clients insane.

Just as grim, in the light of the insanity fight to avoid the electric chair, was the testimony that the Millen brothers enjoyed electric shocks.

Irving chuckled and Murt, the prophet without honor in his own neighborhood a couple of years ago, looked glum. Faber was stealing a nap.

Brothers Get Fun Out of Electric Shock

Max Alexander, neighborhood companion of the Millens, testified about the electric shocks. He told of being called into Murton's room about a year ago and of finding the brothers there tinkering with an electric dynamo.

"They asked me to hold the wires. Then they turned on the current. It was a painful shock. Then both of them held the wires and asked me to turn it on. I did so," he said.

"What was their reaction?" asked Atty. Harvey.

"They seemed to be enjoying it," replied Alexander.

Irving turned to Murton and whispered. Murton frowned and Irving chuckled.

As Miss Siegan told her story in the courtroom, Dist.-Atty. Hugh A. Cregg, of Essex County, accompanied by State Detective Richard Griffin and Deputy Sheriff Stacklehoff, arrived here to confer with Dist.-Atty. Dewing about the still pending Lynn theater murder case, which may be given to the grand jury at Newburyport tomorrow.

Miss Siegan was one of a number of new witnesses called by the Millen defense in an effort to convince the jury that even if Murton and Irving did murder Patrolman Forbes McLeod during the Needham Trust Co. robbery, they should not be punished because they were not responsible.

Irving Gets Fun Out of His Name 'Stupid'

The testimony of most of these concerned the younger brother and again, as on yesterday, it was related that he was called "Stupid" and "acted dumb." Irving again got a lot of chuckles out of these references to him.

Miss Siegan said she had known Murton for about three years.

She saw Irving about once a week.

"I always thought he was childish," she said.

"He kind of pushed me and called me 'Cuckoo Freida' and tried to flatten my nose."

She laughed and put her hand to her nose. Irving grinned and wagged his head.

Dewing cross-examined her, only briefly, gaining her admission she liked the Millen boys' company, finding them "interesting and different." He won also an admission that she went out with Irving again after "jollying that she took offense at."

Several witnesses expected to testify were not on hand when their names were called and for one, Morris Cohen, a new subpoena was issued at Harvey's request.

Freida S. Gouterman, a short, black-haired girl with big dark eyes, testified she used to live in Lawrence ave., Roxbury, near the Millens, and that Murt used to annoy her in the street.

"He used to approach me with a wild look in his eye and scare the life out of me," she said smiling. A member of her family put a stop to this, she added.

Another woman called was Miss Jessica B. Smith, of Gaylord st., Dorchester, who recalled that both Millen boys weren't very bright scholars in her third grade class at the Dickerman school.

Bernard Lappen of Roxbury, a CWA worker, told of meeting Joseph Millen, father of the brothers, in 1931 and of seeing a letter he had from Murton addressed to Mrs. Millen. His recollection of the contents was not permitted in evidence.

'Murton Was Dumb Too,' Says Witness

Dewing cross-examined, bringing out that Lappen was a junkman in 1930, and kept his truck in the Old Grove Hall carbarn, which was under lease to Joseph Millen. The district attorney pressed for Lappen's recollection of what he had seen in the carbarn and Harvey objected. There was a tiff of counsel during which the defense attorney referred to Dewing's line of questioning as "hokum."

Other witnesses were Lewis Morse, a Millen neighbor from Roxbury, who saw Irving grow up with his "foolish smile" and David A. Morey, who is in the decorative advertising business in Boston. Murton worked for Morey in 1930 and was "mostly dumb but on rare occasions brilliant" the witness said.

Morey once sent Murt for his car and found him sound asleep at the wheel, he testified. Murt went to him "about the time of the Needham affair" and asked him to visit the Faber radio parts shop and make suggestions about decorations. He did, but nobody paid much attention to what he said there, he testified.

Murt's bride Norma, who will be tried next month as an accessory to the Needham Trust Company holdup and slaying of Patrolmen Forbes McLeod and Frank O. Haddock, will probably not be called as a witness in her husband's defense after all, according to his attorney, George Stanley Harvey.

whatever as to what will happen to THEM if they are caught.

The men of Arizona like kidnaping as little as do the men of California. And if they come within reach of those kidnapers, the latter will be taken care of so thoroughly that they will never need any care, at any later time, on this earth.

It is your duty to hope, piously, that there will be no violence. But you are not advised to bet on it.

California, a single state much bigger than all of Italy or England, ten times as fertile and forty times as rich in undeveloped wealth, destined one day to have double Italy's forty million population, should be visited by every American. Even the people of Florida should come here and look at this ocean on one side, those mountains on the other. The ocean is the biggest thing on earth, and they would like the mountains, with smooth fields sloping back for miles, the fat cattle on them looking as small as mice, golden grain piled in neat mounds dotting the fields along the highway, other fields growing young green vegetables planted with the perfect accuracy of a silversmith's work. This is truly a great country, and every part of it should be proud of every other part.

The happiest man in California stands this afternoon at the corner of Wilshire blvd. and Westlake park. He is about 27, neatly dressed, and holds before you a big white paper sign that reads: "WORK WANTED, CAN DRIVE."

His idea attracts so much friendly attention, so many faces turning his way, so much public interest that he is happier, probably, than a majority of the gentlemen working farther west in Hollywood and Culver City. No doubt he will get a job, and when he does he will be sorry to lose his "public." It is so gratifying to attract attention.

'Lone Wolf' in New Peep on Beacon Hill

"The lone wolf of Beacon Hill," who has successfully evaded Boston police for the past month, chalked up another win today, when he quickly vanished after being discovered on the fire escape opposite the bedroom of Miss Dorothy Warren, 46 Grove st., Beacon Hill.

Officers Thomas Vahey and George Smith were rushed to the scene in a cruising car, but the man had disappeared. The description given by Miss Warren, answered that of the "lone wolf."

Quincy Court Again Looted

For the second time in two months, burglars broke into the Quincy courthouse last night and after ransacking rooms, departed empty-handed. The break was discovered today.

The thieves gained entrance to the building by forcing a basement door. The lock leading to the clerk of court's office was broken, but two safes in the office containing money were overlooked.

The last time the courthouse was broken into, $200 was stolen.

MAYOR FIGHTS NEW MARKET

Mayor Mansfield was today recorded as unalterably opposed to the establishment of a wholesale produce terminal market on state-owned land on Summer st., South Boston, at a big protest meeting before Gov. Ely and the Executive Council.

Gov. Ely expressed the view that there is need for larger facilities for handling the food supply of the Metropolitan district. He was interested, he said, in determining if financial terms of the lease were just to the state.

R. H. Davison, attorney for the lessees, told the governor that the present market is so congested that farmers must arrive the night before to get accommodations for the following day. Faneuil Hall market, he argued, has outlived its usefulness.

Jail For Lawyer Sought By Prober

Dunbar F. Carpenter, special commissioner appointed to investigate fraudulent practices by lawyers, today asked the Supreme Court to adjudge Atty. George L. Ellsworth of Sherborn in contempt of court and sentence him to jail.

Ellsworth, an attorney since 1906, refused to testify before Carpenter, the petition states, and refused to produce papers in connection with a case.

Wellesley Girl's Photo Is Barred as 'Risque'

Curves, graceful, enchanting feminine curves have ever been the lure that has made college men fight almost to the death for a bid to Wellesley College's Junior Prom.

And never did students or faculty quarrel with the fitness of that.

But it was quite another thing when a picture—an all too faithful picture—of those curves shuffled off to Buffalo, there to fall into the hands of the headmistress of a fashionable finishing school.

The offending photograph caused the temporary suppression of "The World of Wellesley," a beautiful illustrated brochure that was being circulated among prospective students of the school.

CLOTHES TOO TIGHT

It also caused "first editions" of the advertising pamphlet suddenly to become valuable and much sought after. That because the picture is to be replaced by a "safer" scene of the school's junior prom. This will cost approximately $200.

The picture which brought the protest from Buffalo, and which —it has been learned—was snipped out of the book by the principal of many a high school lest his pupils should see it, depicts two Wellesley girls in a dormitory room, adding the final touches to their costume before going to the ball.

The girl in the foreground is wearing a clinging gown—a bit out of style now—that is fitted very snugly around the waist and over the hips. The glare of the photographer's flashlight on the shiny silk more than does justice to her shape.

College authorities said today that while the gown may have been perfectly proper, the picture is a bit too much in the manner of Mae West to be good propaganda for the high New England standards of Wellesley.

SUITS WEST POINTER

Students, who could be persuaded to hop off their bikes for a minute in the village to discuss the picture, frankly said that they thought that the powers that be were a bit too prim about it all. And some of them honestly admitted that they were jealous of the girl in the photograph.

One freshman sighed:

"That picture was the best thing in the book."

And that, perhaps, is the way a certain West Point cadet, whose photograph is on the "picture girl's" dresser, feels about it.

But the authorities have spoken. The curves must go—even if it costs $200. After all, curves are out of harmony with the straight, soaring lines of Wellesley's towers.

Dr. Martin Heads Pasteur Institute

Paris, May 16 (AP)—Dr. Louis Martin, one of the world's foremost authorities on contagious diseases, today was named head of the Pasteur institute with which he has been associated 40 years. He succeeds the late Dr. Emile Roux, a co-worker of the founder, Louis Pasteur.

BOSTON LINER IS AGROUND

By International News Service

New York, May 16—The freighter Norfolk of the Clyde Mallory line was aground 200 yards off the Amagansett, L. I., coast guard station early today.

The ship, bound from New York for Boston, ran aground during the night, and apparently was in no danger of being broken up.

Coast guard vessels were standing by ship and it was said the vessel probably would be floated today.

SWANSON CALLS FOR 20 SHIPS

By International News Service

Washington, May 16—Immediate construction of 20 new warships was announced by Secretary of the Navy Swanson today.

The program embraces 12 destroyers, 2 destroyer leaders and 6 submarines, all to cost $40,000,000, from PWA funds, Swanson said.

"These ships represent our most urgent need at the present time.

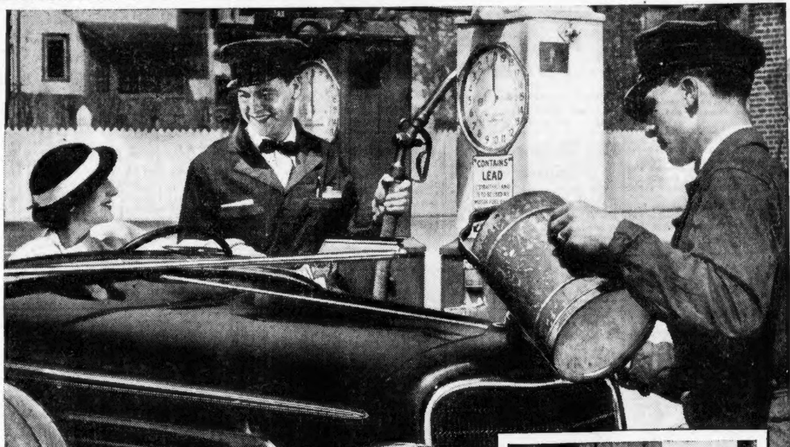
SOCONY
SOCONY-VACUUM
Good Gasoline
—AND SOMETHING MORE!



Yes, you get Much More than the Gasoline you pay for when you Stop at a Socony Station or Dealer

IF YOU'RE like most people, you don't stop at the first pump you see when your gas gauge reads "low." You look around for a station that offers more than good gasoline and oil.

And that's right. For it takes more than gasoline to keep your car running.

It takes attention to the tires, the radiator, the battery, the windshield—a lot of such little services you don't want to bother with yourself.

That's exactly why Socony servicemen carefully check your oil—fill the radiator—look for soft tires—clean the windshield and rear window.

Go beyond that: it's the reason why the stations are kept so spic and span. Why we put in telephones and keep washrooms clean and provide the latest information about road conditions.

We make Socony Mobilgas to give as much power, as much pick-up, as quick starting, as little knocking as can be crowded into a gasoline. We refine Mobiloil to the special requirements of the kind of cars on the road today.

And if you'll stop at the sign of the Flying Red Horse, we think you'll find our men back up these products with service that's equally far above the average.

Try it—and see. There's a Socony station or dealer for every two miles of road in New York and New England.

FORTY POINTS TO LUBRICATE—and the Socony man gets them all with the right lubricant. The reason is partly his training —partly a printed chart, which shows exactly what to do.

YOU'LL FIND NEAT and sanitary washrooms with running water, clean towels and other conveniences. In many Socony Stations, you will also find a comfortably furnished restroom for your use. Just look around for the sign of the Flying Red Horse when you want to refresh yourself while out driving.

NO SOILED GLOVES! And no soiled dresses or trousers either! No Socony serviceman ever enters a car for service without first carefully covering the wheel, the seat cushions, and even the fenders.

FEAR OF MURT MILLEN BARED BY GIRL

IRVING ALWAYS SILLY, JURY IS TOLD BY FORMER FRIEND

By WILLIAM C. CONWAY
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Dedham Courthouse, May 16—Girl friends, boy friends, school teachers and just ordinary acquaintances paraded before the jury today as counsel for Irving and Murton Millen sought to prove them insane at their trial with Abe Faber.

Brief testimony marked the appearance of each witness. The brothers eyed each one with mingled feelings and Abe dozed, as usual in a corner of the prisoners' cage. Irving giggled.

One girl told of her fear of Murton.

Court convened at 10:22 a. m. Attorney Harvey called the name of Morris Cohen as the first witness. Deputy Sheriff Norris Pinault announced Cohen was not in the corridors. Judge Brown ordered another subpoena issued.

Lewis Morse, 40 Lawrence ave., Roxbury, a neighbor of the Millens, testified under questioning by Harvey that he has known Irving and Murton for 11 years.

"Irving has worked for me on my car three or four times," Morse said. "He always looked kind of drowsy. He always had that foolish smile on his face. You'd asked him to do something and he would give you that foolish smile. He was always twitching his head. Murton always looked drowsy, as though he had something on his mind."

Dist. Atty. Dewing cross-examined Morse briefly.

In answer to questions by Atty. Scharton, the witness said he saw Faber with Murton frequently but never saw him climb the porch pillar to get into the Millen home.

Millen's Former Girl Friend Is Witness

The next witness was Miss Freida Siegan, 10 Edson st., Dorchester. She is a former girl friend of both Irving and Murton. Miss Siegan is tall and pretty. She testified she has known the Millen brothers for about three years.

Q (by Harvey)—How frequently did you see Irving? A—At least once a week.

Q—Did you have occasion to notice anything peculiar about his actions? A—I always thought he was childish. He was silly and always grinning. The first time I met him he was shy. He didn't even say "How do you do." It was hard for him to get the words out of his mouth. Then he kind of pushed me and called me "Coo-coo Frieda" and tried to flatten my nose. He was nervous and always banging his knee.

Q—How long have you known Murton? A—About three years.

Q—What did you observe about him? A—Once he showed me the palm of his hand and said, "See that line there? That's the life line and that means I'm going to live only until I am 25 or 26." Sometimes when we went out together he wouldn't talk to me for an hour at a time. He seemed to have something on his mind.

Q—Was that a common occurrence? A—Oh, yes.

The witness was taken under cross examination by Dist. Atty. Dewing.

Q—You know their sister, Frances? A—I know her.

Q—You have been out with the boys, both Irving and Murton? A—Many times.

Q—You liked their company? A—Yes, I did.

Q—You went to dances with Murton? A—Yes.

Q.—You found Irving a good companion. He was fooling all the time, such as throwing the water at you, and he would jolly you along? A.—I wouldn't call it jollying.

Q.—You wouldn't take offense at it? A.—Yes, I did sometimes.

Q.—But you went out with him again? A.—Yes.

The witness was excused.

Murton Was Slo ', Says Miss Smith

Miss Jessica B. Smith, 11 Gaylord st., Dorchester, testified she had been a school teacher of Irving Millen. Miss Smith said Irving was a pupil of the third grade which she taught at Dickerman school.

Counsel Harvey asked if she had ever noticed anything in Irving which would indicate mental abnormality. The answer was, "No, sir."

Dist.-Atty. Dewing objected to further questioning by Harvey along the line of mental abnormalities but Judge Brown allowed the questioning.

Q—What did you observe? A—I did not remember Irving Millen but I remember Murton. I do remember that Irving Millen was demoted from the third grade to the second grade.

Asked what she remembered about Murton, witness replied: "He wac very slow. I had him for thirty weeks. He was demoted back to the third grade."

Witness said that the appearance of Murton had not changed a great deal. "He was always slow mentally," added the teacher.

Murton 'A.normc?,' Says Leonard Lappen

Dist. Atty. Dewing said he had no questions to ask.

Leonard Lappen, 94 Brunswick st., Roxbury, was the next witness. He said he had known the Millen family since 1930, and that he knew Irving and Murton "somewhat."

Q—State whether or not in your contacts with Irving Millen you ever noticed anything which would cause you to believe he was mentally abnormal? A—Why, yes, quite a few times. He lacked ambition, no push and go. He was a fellow who seemed to be dopey, sleepy, for a fellow 17 years old. He lacked the life he should have had at that age. Once he thought he could fix my car. It took him two days and it was worse than before. I had to get a good mechanic to fix it. It took him two weeks.

Witness said that he remembered when Irving would talk his words were all jumbled up and he couldn't understand what was said. "He often would shake his head, I didn't pay much attention then. It didn't concern me.

Q—Since this case came up it came back to your recollection? A—Yes it has.

With reference to Murton, witness said he went to the Millen home in 1930. He said Murton had a letter he had written to his mother.

Dist.-Atty. Dewing objected to Harvey's question, "Do you recall what the letter said?"

The prosecution asked if the defense had the letter. It appeared they had not. The court excluded the question for the timebeing. Prosecutor Dewing and Attorney Harvey then went to the bench for a conference with the court.

Tire Business Was His Only Activity

When the conference ended Attorney Harvey asked for a temporary dismissal of the witness. District Attorney Dewing asked if he could ask a question before such dismissal. Judge Brown said it would probably be better for the government to cross-examine immediately.

Witness said he was now a CWA worker and in 1930 had been a dealer in tires.

Q.—What do you mean, tires? A.—I exchanged blowout patches for old tires.

Q.—You were a junk man? A.—I was at that time.

Q.—Was that all you kept in the Grove Hall car barn, those tires? A.—Positive.

Q.—No other business? A.—Positive.

Harvey jumped to his feet saying, "Yoir honor, I don't know what this line of hokim is about, but I askd that line of questioning me stricken out."

The court excluded the question.

Defense counsel also objected to the prosecutor's question to witness if he had seen Murton around the car barn.

Judge Brown ruled that Dewing could cross-examine on any additional evidence which might develop.

Murton Frightened Girl She Says

Miss Freida S. Gouterman, 96 Geneva ave., Roxbury, testified that she had known both Millen boys an dthat she had been annoyed and frightened by Irving on several occasions.

QDid you ever notice anything in Irving's actions which would lead you to believe he was mentally abnormal?

A—Yes sir. Often times when I was passing him he would annoy me, accost me. He would force his attentions on me. Finally someone in my family had to complain to his folks about his actions. He frightened me.

Witness added that in school the always noticed that Irving was extremely lazy, never took interest in his work.

"He always had a wild look in his eyes, he scared the life out of me. He always tried to intimidate me. I was afraid of him," she added.

Murton Brilliant Rarely, Says Morey

Miss Gouterman was excused without cross-examination. She was followed by David A. Morey, 1014 Boylston st., Newton Highlands, a decorative designer, with offices in Arlington st., Boston. Murton Millen worked for him from the fall of 1930 until the fall of 1931, Morey testified.

"Murton was a sort of super-errand boy around the place," Morey said. "He was sort of dumb but there were times when he seemed extremely brilliant, but those were very rare occasions."

He last saw Murton some time in February or January, when Murton visited Morey's office with Faber and asked Morey to come out to the radio shop and advise them on decorating.

Scharton questioned the witness closely about this incident.

Q—Who did most of the talking when you went to visit the shop? A—Murton did the talking, but they didn't seem to be paying much attention to what I said.

Q—Did you meet a man named Rothberg there?

Q—You kept Murton Millen working for you for a year? A—Yes.

Q—There were plenty of people looking for jobs in 1930? A—Yes, but I didn't want t omake a change.

Q—Do you know the date in February when he came to see you? A—No.

Q—Was it February 2? A—I don't know. (February 2 was the date of the Needham holdup.)

Max Alexander of Schuyler st., Roxbury, was the next witness. He has known Murton and Irving for about five years.

"The first day I met Murton was over at his sister's home," he said. "He was setting up a sign and for no reason he started to laugh. He bent over until his head was almost between his knees. The laugh used to send shivers up my spine until I became well enough ecquainted with him to overlook it.

"He used to drive down Lawrence ave., especially on wet days, and jam the brakes on his racer when it had obtained its maximum speed."

"I was sitting in the parlor listening to the radio and he would come in and turn it on as loud as he could and then snap it ff and walk out of the room, without any explanation. One band in particular, Cab Calloway's, would send him into hysterics and he would dance around.

"Once the two boys invited me into their room and they asked me to hold two wires. They gave me a severe electrical shock. It was painful. Then I turned the dynamo and they held the wires."

Q—What was their reaction? A—They seemed to be enjoying it.

O'NEILL GRILLED ON BIG LOANS

Joseph H. O'Neil, 81, former Congressman and once candidate for mayor, continued his testimony relative to Daniel C. Mulloney's financial transaction with the closed Federal National Bank before U. S. Judge Hugh D. McLellan and a jury today.

Mulloney is charged with misappropriation of funds and credits of the bank and the abstraction of collateral, all to the extent of $175,600.

O'Neil, former chairman of the board of directors of the closed bank, testified he knew nothing about the borrowing by Mulloney of $25,000 from the bank on Oct. 27, 1931, to pay off obligations elsewhere. He did not know at the time that Mulloney owed the bank $62,213 and had collateral there of $63,505. He was unaware that on Oct. 28, 1931, Mulloney oorrowed $25,000 more from the bank, when Mulloney's total obligation to the bank was $92,213, until the board met that afternoon and approved the transaction.

O'Neil testified further that he did not know that two weeks before the bank closed Mulloney withdrew $12,990 collateral from the bank.

INSULL'S HOLDING COMPANY PLAN REAPED MILLIONS

Tuesday's installments in the life of Samuel Insull is depicted the creation of Insull's "empire" and the principal foundation of his financial success. Today's installment tells of the enormous increase of Insull's power in Chicago within 20 years of his arrival there. Insull's methods of holding "with other people's money" is graphically related.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

There was a period when Insull virtually owned Chicago—for all practical purposes. That period began about two years before the beginning of the World War. To be exact, it was 1912—just 20 years after Insull's arrival in Chicago, and just 20 years before his flight. A New York writer visiting Chicago dubbed the city "Insullopolis."

Every whirling factory wheel, every moving street car, virtually all of the myriad activities of the population, were linked directly with the Insull system, and Insull himself was about to make a direct connection with the purses, big and little, of the people. For "Insullopolis" to him was then a land of promise—not yet a land of promissory notes.

In 1912, then, Insull founded Middle West Utilities. He called it a "holding company" and it was in fact a holding company for other people's money, until the bottom of it dropped out and it could hold no more. Some people called it a bubble, blown too big. It started this way:

Insull Formed a Holding Company

It happened that in the course of his business life Insull had acquired an interest in a little light and power company at New Albany, Indiana.

This is the process: He takes the blocks of stocks which he is holding and he sells them, on credit, to the new-born corporation, the holding company, Middle West. The sale has to be on credit because the infant Middle West has no money! Ordinarily, a man might not feel very safe in selling on credit to a company which has nothing, but Insull is not troubled by any doubts on this score. He should worry—he's the president of the company!

So the sale is made. The price? Not that it makes much difference, but there has to be some kind of a price. So Insull as seller figures out a value and Insull as president says it suits him. It is $330,000.

Thus we have Insull as president of a corporation which owes $330,000 to Insull as a person.

Now comes the magic. The corporation issues stock. How much is the stock worth? That's anybody's guess—everybody's guess. Wall street exists because people never stop guessing about the value of stock. And surely the company which issues it has as good a right as anybody else to guess its value.

Insull as president says the value of the preferred stock is $4,000,000 and the value of the common stock. All right. Call it $10,000,000 if you want to, but who's going to pay $10,000,000 for it? Insull the president takes up this question with Insull the person.

"Sam," says Sam to Sam, "will you give me $10,000,000 for this stock?"

"Hardly, Sam," says the other Sam to the other Sam. "Tell you what I'll do, I'll give you $3,600,000. Take it or leave it."

"Sold," says Sam to Sam. "On credit."

(A mirror might help in this trick.)

Well, apparently not much has happened thus far in spite of the fact that the two Sams owe each other money, which they can't pay each other. What's the use of all the bookkeeping and all the printing of pretty certificates if it leaves the two Sams just where they were before? Answer: It doesnt leave them that way.

Because out there in the chilly street, pressing his nose flat against the window, gazing with envy on the whole transaction, is a hungry and unfortunate figure who shall be designated hereinafter as Mr. Public.

"Oh, see sam with his pretty new stocks!" cries Mr. Public, and he hurries home to tell Mrs. Public about it.

"Maybe," says she, always an optimist, "maybe Sam would let us in on the Ground Floor."

"I doubt it," says Mr. Public.

Then Mr. and Mrs. Public Are Admitted

But his wife, as usual, is right. Woman's intuition. She's pretty sure Sam has a kind heart. He contributes to charities, doesn't he? Of course he does. And right now he will open the trap—the door, beg pardon—and let in Mr. and Mrs. Public.

Not only that, but he will let every share of it. You know how nice that is. Remember what your economics professor used to say?—"In the purchase of common stocks, children, there is an inevitable element of risk. Of course common stocks sometimes make much more money than preferred, but, be conservative." So Sam will let the public have the preferred. And—wait a minute—he will do a really handsome thing. He'll throw in, gratis, a million dollars worth of the common, so that all these preferred stock holders won't be entirely bereft when the common goes up to $500 a share or wherever it's going.

Sam even does better than that. Instead of charging Mr. and Mrs. Public $4,000,000 for the preferred stock plus the gift of common, he discounts the whole business and says he'll take $3,600,000, which is exactly the sum that Sam as a person needs in order to pay off Sam as president.

And now the trick is almost complete. Sam pays in the $3,600,000 to square his personal debt. Then the company pays him the $330,000 it has been owing him for the assorted stocks he turned in at the start. And where are we at?

The company has the stock and a cash fund composed of the difference between $3,600,000 and $330,000. The public has all the preferred stock and some common. Sam has his original money back, plus $5,000,000 worth of common stock, plus control of the company. And everybody is going to be rich just as soon as the common stock goes to $500 a share or thereabouts.

It worked out like that.

Ponzi in Last Ditch Fight to Stay in U.S.

Without much hope, having lost his plea for a 90-day extension of the time allotted to argue a federal deportation order, Charles Ponzi, one-time financial wizard, today set about preparing a last-minute appeal to Secy. of Labor Frances Perkins.

Miss Mary H. Ward, immigration commissioner, said that the department will probably forward the deportation order from Washington any day, but she has given Ponzi a few more hours of grace to do what he can.

Ponzi, who is now a provision salesman for a Boston market firm, wants a year or two probation to show his good faith.

CHINA BISHOP PREDICTS WAR

By Associated Press

London, Ont., May 16—War in the Far East is predicted as a certainty by the Rt. Rev. W. C. White, Bishop of Honan, China.

He believes Japan, China, Russia—and possibly Great Britain and the United States—will be involved.

"In the East," Bishop White told the Anglican Synod of Huron meeting yesterday, "they no longer speak of the possibility of war. They only wonder when it will begin."

8 More Americans Curtsy to King George Tonight

By Associated Press

London, May 16—Eight more American women will thrill tonight to the brief moment of social glory in a hasty, breathless curtsy before Great Britain's king and queen.

Today was an exciting round of last-minute fittings and final arrangements for the excited elect: Mrs. Paul Hyde Bonner, Mrs. Edward B. Close, Miss Helen Lee Doherty, all of New York city; Mrs. Pryns Hopkins of Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mrs. Edward Miller-Mills of Chicago; Miss Nancy Penoyer of San Francisco; Mrs. Cecile B. Seiberling of Akron, O., and Miss Marie McRae Smith of Grand Rapids, Mich.

There were 13 American debutantes and matrons among 300 women presented at the first court of the season at Buckingham Palace last night.

Stunningly gowned and bejeweled, they walked one by one out across a few yards of carpet, bowed and curtsied before King George and Queen Mary, received smiling acknowledgment from their majesties—and then moved on to an ante-room.

Some 800 persons attended the brilliant ceremonies. Outside the palace grounds, thousands thronged the Mall and nearby precincts for a glimpse of those summoned to court.

Perhaps a girl who fainted in the crush got the best view of all the outsiders. She was carried inside the gates and, reviving, witnessed the entire spectacle of arrivals.

Unlike the first group of Americans, those who go to the palace tonight will not have an opportunity to see the Prince of Wales.

The Prince left late last night on a three-day trip to Wales where he will get a first-hand view of how the other end of the social scale—the unemployed—live.

YOU CAN USE MOST THINGS that grow out of the ground just as soon as they are harvested. But not so with cigarette tobaccos . . . not if you want them to be mild and taste right.

It takes many months of ageing in the wood—2½ to 3 years to be exact—to bring out the flavor and mildness of the tobaccos—just as it takes many months of ageing to bring out the flavor of rare wines.

It means something that Chesterfield tobaccos are aged and mellowed like fine wines—it helps to give Chesterfield its milder and better taste.

Katharine Cornell is coming to Boston this season, after all. On Thursday night, June 7, the famous star will open a three-day engagement at the Boston Opera House in Rudolf Besier's "The Barrets of Wimpole Street." Miss Cornell is now making a 17,000-mile tour of the country, appearing chiefly in cities where she has not acted. Boston, of course, is one of the major exceptions. Miss Cornell played in the Barrett-Browning romance two years ago, but the engagement was limited and thousands of theater-goers were disappointed.

Basile Rathbone, a Boston favorite in his own right, will appear opposite the star as Robert Browning. Charles Waldron and Brenda Forbes are in the cast. Miss Cornell has been giving a repertory of plays in most of her engagements, but the Boston engagement will comprise four performances, with a Saturday matinee, of her best-known vehicle, "The Barretts." From Ray Henderson, Miss Cornell's acute press representative, comes an amusing sidelight of the Cornell repertoire, having to do with her playing of "Romeo and Juliet" in Buffalo (Miss Cornell"s home city).

To read Ray write it, tradition of "The Green Hat," "The Age of Innocence" and "Dishonored Lady," plays in which she acted "bad" women, will cling to the star in spite of her saintly Elizabeth Barrett, her outraged Lucrece and her domestic Candida. When Miss Cornell presented "Romeo and Juliet" in her home-town, Mr. Henderson says that he heard two elderly ladies in running comment throughout the performance. When the curtain rose on Juliet's bedchamber, the scene wherein the Veronese lovers are to bid farewell, one of the gray-haired women audibly whispered to the other:

Vivian Hart

"There! I told you so! Kit Cornell would act a play that had a bedroom in it."

Yet another important booking note comes to hand—indicating that this hardy season is not yet ready to call it quits in the living theatre. At the Shubert Theatre, a Gilbert and Sullivan series is to begin with "The Mikado" on May 28, under the sponsorship of S. M. Chartock. "The Pirates of Penzance," "Iolanthe" and other favorites will follow "The Mikado." William Danforth, Vivian Hart, Frank Moulan, Roy Cropper, Herbert Waterous, Vera Ross and Allen Waterous are in the company.

Joe Penner is not going to make a personal appearance in Boston this season, although he will play twelve weeks along the Loew circuit, and will open Friday night in Syracuse. It was in connection with this engagement that Billy Downes, supervisor of the Loew theatres here and in upper New York, left Boston after "The Shining Hour" picture.

RUSHMORE TEST TIME IS SHORT

With the closing date a little more than two weeks away, reports received yesterday from all parts of the country told of increasing entries in the Mount Rushmore Memorial inscription competition.

The Massachusetts regional committee, which is headed by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, declared it was certain the competition would set a new high mark for the number of texts submitted for judging.

The fact that President Roosevelt is chairman of the national committee that will pass on the final awards in this tournament of expression, has added to the interest it has for students and teachers everywhere.

Persons taking part in the competition have until midnight of Wednesday, May 30, to file their texts with the regional committee.

Prof. Hudnut Named

New York, May 16—Appointment of Prof. Joseph Hudnut as dean of the school of agriculture of Columbia University was announced by President Nicholas Murray Butler.

Big Audience for Park

The new burlesque moderne show at the Park opened to capacity business, and proved one of the spring season's snappiest offerings at the Minsky theater. The star is Jean Lee, and the show is titled as "Ada Lott from Hungary. Miss Lee sings delightfully and deviates from routine in her own dance, "Rythmania."

Comedy stars are "Red" Marshall, with his traversty, "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde"; Murray Leonard, Harry Fields, Shorty McAllister, and Harry Steppe, veteran Jewish comic was recognized and afforded a cordial reception. One time Boston favorite this marks his first re-appearance in many years.

Joan Dare, Helen Howard and Louise Stewart, expert dancers, are featured. The midnight show comes Friday at 11:30 p. m.

Cecil B. De Mille Will Produce "Buccaneer" With Harry Wilcoxon in Title Role

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor, Universal Service

Copyright, 1934, Universal Service, Inc

Los Angeles, May 16—The most hectic negotiations and probably the most long drawn out discussions over a story ended when Paramount bought "Buccaneer" from Maxwell Anderson and Laurence Stallings.

Cecil B. De Mille wanted the play which deals with the life of Henry Margan, the famous pirate. But the two authors were asking a young fortune so for days the deal hung in the balance.

Louella O. Parsons

Now the rights are cleared and so C. B. will have the pirate story which he will produce after "Sampson and Delilah" Harry Wilcoxon, whose voice is something to hear in "Cleopatra" and who is a grand actor, is C. B's, choice for the blustering and pirating hero.

Joan Crawford's boy friend, Franchot Tone, moves to the Warner Brothers studio. He's been borrowed to emote opposite the very attractive Dolores Del Rio in the Oriental number, "Farewell to Shanghai." Tone, being always the perfect gentleman, will probably play the idle rich youth who falls in love with a half caste. Just a guess on my part. Joan's divorce from Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., became final Monday. What will she do? Ask Franchot.

Joan Crawford

Seems to me somewhere in the dim distant past I remember Victor Moore in a movie. That, however, needn't be held against him since Stanley Bergerman has a very special place for him in "Romance in the Rain," a romantic comedy with music which will co-star Chester Morris and Heather Angel under the direction of Stuart Walker.

Really Carl Laemmle, Sr., should have handed me this story May 13 on Mothers' Day. He has decided to make a motion picture based on Whistler's immortal painting—the painting which symbolizes every mother, so gentle, so sweet and so lovely is the famous artist's conception of his own mother. Mr. Laemmle will call his picture "My Mother" and he will attempt to get an actress who looks like the painting.

A communication has been received from Lincoln Steadman, president of the Thalians. Says Lincoln, who by the way, is a son of Myrtle Steadman, "we have signed a contract to make another series of six pictures for Universal and not RKO. I have no idea where the RKO story originated as we have had no negotiations with them. I am taking 15 Thalians to appear at the fair in Chicago and we will make the first two pictures on our Universal contract there." Perhaps I should explain the RKO story came right from the RKO lot so naturally I thought it was true.

Anita Loos spent a good part of today trying to help detectives locate a diamond bracelet which was stolen from her home. The bracelet has sentimental value in that it was presented to Anita by the head of Cartier in appreciation of her mention of their name in her widely read novel, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." The bracelet is a specially designed owl's head with a large diamond in the center.

'beacon hill'

By Betty Alden

THIS WEEK IS GOING to keep us going places . . . the social calendar is full to overflowing. We missed the meeting of the Vincent Club yesterday for luncheon at The Country Club . . . it looked like rain, it did rain, and we knew that the description of the wet attire of the members would prove dull reading . . . no doubt the usual number turned up for an annual chat and that's that!

MRS. EDWARD A. TAFT

The Beacon Hill Gardens are opening again today . . . in case you wish to wander about the Hill you may visit Mrs. Garden Bourne's place on Mt. Vernon st. where we understand there will be music . . . on Pinckney st. the houses and gardens of Miss Amelia Baldwin, Miss Eleanor Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. Campbell (they are apparently so well known that they need no further identification), Mrs. William Herman, Miss Pattee and Miss Peters and on West Cedar st., Miss Ellen Cushing will open her garden and Mrs. George E. Clement and Mrs. Edward A. Taft. So buy your progressive ticket and take in the gardens of Beacon Hill and anything else that happens to be about . . .

There will be a Rummage Sale for the Harriet Tubman House today all day at the home . . . Mrs. John Montague, Mrs. Nelson W. Howard, Mrs. Lewis A. Nichols, Mrs. Edwin Peterson and Mrs. Alvin D. Myers are assisting and will greet the bargain hunters . . . articles of all types will be for sale.

On Thursday, Mrs. William Emerson Barrett will have a meeting and luncheon at her home on Beacon st. for the members of the advertising committee of the Boston Morning Musicales . . . Mrs. A. Barr Comstock, chairman, and what a chairman, will make plans for a three-week concentrated drive for advertising for the Seventh Season Program Book . . .

Tea in Honor of Mrs. Carl Dreyfus

AMONG MRS. BARRETT'S GUESTS besides Mrs. Comstock will be Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Mrs. Franklin A. Pemberton, Mrs. Lawrence Black, Mrs. Albert M. Kales, Mrs. Francis W. Capper, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. John W. Myers, Mrs. Howard E. Plimpton, Mrs. Walter A. Carl, Mrs. Frederic W. Mattheis and Mrs. Henry M. Shreve.

The Brittany Coffee Shop is having a tea in honor of Mrs. Carl Dreyfus who has been so valuable in promoting and financing this charming restaurant which is maintained for the benefit of the Household Nursing Association . . .

On Thursday we may go down to the sea to view the German cruiser . . . we hear the officers and cadets are very handsome and Heaven knows they cannot help being handsome any more than they can help being sent over to Boston by their government . . . let us be reasonable. If we could impress Mr. Hitler that we do not approve of certain measures he is taking in his own country by thumbing our ladylike nose at them, we might try it . . . but we have a strong sense that he would not care a Gosh Darn whether our hand was at our aristocratic nose or drinking his health in German beer . . . it would be a feeble attempt at best and if there is one thing we will not admit it is being wittingly feeble . . . So—we are going down to see what a German training ship looks like . . . and we hope all the officers will be on board so we can give you a word picture of them. We trust we will not forget where we are and say the only German words we know, "Hock! The Kaiser" . . .

Harvard Military Ball on Program

DELINDA DEWSON IS BEING MARRIED on Friday . . . there's an event.

Mrs. Adolph Leeds is bridging it for Denison House at her home in Chestnut Hill . . .

The Harvard Military Ball will bring out all the Boston Beans at the Hotel Continental . . . we are going to the dinner-dance at the Hotel Brunswick which is being given for the Germans early on Friday evening and will later wind up at the Harvard Ball . . . what an evening we are going to enjoy . . . uniforms are our undoing.

Friday noon there will be a Flower Show at the Woman's City Club and lunch will be served in the Garden . . . if you have never eaten at this charming spot and partaken of their delicious lunches, try it!

There are three weddings on Saturday . . . Christiana Bartlett, Harriet Smith and Eleanor Ives will trail the ivory satin and tulle to the tune of the wedding march . . . busy day for us.

Eleanor Ives

New Debutante List Out Soon

THE WINCHESTER HORSE SHOW will allure the horse lovers . . . and the Country Fair at Kendall Green will draw a large crowd . . . so if we have seeming brain-waves toward the latter part of the week, just skip it . . .

The debutante list is about ready to come out . . . we have about sixty names ready for you but will wait to get a few more. The Parent's League, without asking us, just went ahead and decided not to give the season's list of buds to the society editors for publication . . . well, they will probably be published just the same. So just bide a wee and you will know all . . . We hear there are about two hundred girls who want to bloom this coming year . . . well, bless their dear hearts, why not? We will do our best for them . . .

This is a seemingly endless page . . . we have an engagement for you for Saturday's publication . . . we know of a pending divorce and will you be surprised? Our pleasure . . . with apologies to P. F.

Chatty Notes of Social Circles

BOSTONIANS REGISTERED in New York include Mrs. William D. Baldwin and Mrs. Wellington Wells, Jr., of Cambridge who are registered at the Weylin Hotel . . . Mr. and Mrs. Arthur D. Little and Mrs. Daniel K. Snow who are guests at the Barclay . . .

MISS ELEANOR S. PARKER of Boston will be among the early guests at the Hotel Rockmere in Marblehead when the season opens this year. Other socially prominent persons from the eastern states who are planning to make this popular North Shore Center their headquarters for the summer are Mrs. Floyd Parsons and daughter, Jean of New York City, Mrs. Joseph Pynchon of Springfield, accompanied by her daughter, and Mr. A. W. Gilbert, accompanied by his family, all from Hartford, Connecticut.

Miss Helen Dorothy Walsh Is Bride in Brighton

Teachers' College Grad Weds Mr. Howard Rooney

WHITE LILIES AND TALL green cedars form the dignified background for the wedding of Miss Helen Dorothy Walsh when her marriage to Mr. Howard Rooney is held at Our Lady of the Presentation church in Brighton today.

Gowned in finest princess lace with cap of seed pearls, and veil of Brussells net and lace, Miss Walsh carries a bouquet of calla lilies. Miss Mary Walsh is her sister's maid of honor, in a striking costume of yellow striped organza with powder blue accessories, and carrying an old-fashioned bouquet. Miss Grace and Miss Rita Walsh, two other sisters, are brideasmaids, wearing powder blue organza and yellow picture hats, and old-fashioned bouquets will complete the ensemble.

Best man duties is performed by Mr. Arthur Morrissey of Brighton. Mr. Richard H. Walsh, superintendent of the Suffolk Court House, gives his daughter in marriage.

An usher group comprises William Bennet, Jr., of Brighton; Edmund Lockney of West Roxbury, John J. Nagle of Allston, and Paul Norton of Brighton.

Miss Walsh is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Walsh of Brighton, and is a graduate of Teachers' College, in Boston. Mr. Rooney, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Rooney, is a graduate of Boston College.

A reception in the Ruby Room of the Hotel Touraine follows the ceremony.

Record Crowd Is Expected to Attend All-Day Affair to Benefit Hospital

BOXHOLDERS FOR THE WINCHESTER HORSE SHOW on Saturday, for the benefit of the Winchester Hospital, are announced today by Miss M. Alice Mason, of Winchester, show treasurer since the inaugural show at "Aigremont" in June, 1921.

Heading the list are Mrs. Oren C. Sanborn, chairman of the horse show committee, and her daughter Mrs. Helen Sanborn Ralls, who were sponsors of the original show at the Sanborn estate as well as the following members of the committee, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence H. Bankhart, Arthur Black, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph F. Burkhart, John Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Irving, Arthur A. Kidder, Miss Gladys Marchant, John P. Marston and Dr. Mary T. Maynard.

Other boxholders include Dr. James A. Arne, Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Atherton, Nathan B. Bidwell, William E. Coburn, Albert Comins, J. Edward Downes, Wallace F. Flanders, Miss Alice Lamprey, Miss A. Natalie Jewett, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard McGoldrick, Mrs. Robert Metcalf, Miss Harriet Walworth, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold R. Sawyer.

Judge Black and A. L. Danforth, in charge of selecting the judges, have announced that William Almy, Jr., will award hunter and jumper prizes; Robert B. Almy will place the polo ponies; Mrs. Robert B. Almy will make the horsemanship decisions and Josiah P. Wescott will rank the saddle horses and ponies. Winchester exhibitors are pleased to have the distinguished family trio of Almys officiating on Saturday because of their extensive equine knowledge and experience.

The Winchester show, which is an all-day affair, will be staged on the grounds of Good's Riding School, and judging by the record breaking Melrose and Newton open air shows, the entry should be exceptionally brilliant in the thirty-three classes scheduled Saturday. Arthur H. Lovesey, manager and ringmaster, predicts an unusually large show.

Among the former blue ribbon winners expected to compete are Mr. and Mrs. William K. Irving's Sportsman, Miss Mary McElwain's Killarney Rose and Mallow Town, Miss Constance Greco's Greylight, Miss Helen Downer's Mahogany Lad, Miss Marion Atherton's Dale McDonald, Mrs. Harold R. Sawyer's Peerless Princess, Miss Helen Danforth's Boiling Over, Miss Helen Balfour's Cape Lady, Allan Wilson's Top Sergeant, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Hopewell's Butterball, Miss Deborah Bankhart's The Tramp and James Corbett's Red Fancy. Horse lovers are looking forward to seeing William J. Davidson's winning hunt team, Watch Me, Newry and Rock Edge.

TRUE TO TYPE

H. G. Wells Is Visiting U. S. Like Prince, Incognito

By GILBERT SELDES

LIKE a prince of a reigning house, H. G. Wells is visiting America in disguise. His name was on the sailing list and he met interviewers, but we are so accustomed to having Wells here on business of importance that this arrival seems unofficial. He hasn't even made any predictions and has said nothing of his own intentions.

It is pleasant to think that he comes here for a holiday, and if you are reading books you can multiply the pleasure by buying, at half a dollar or a dollar, dozens of books with which Wells held the attention of the world years ago—and which are still worth reading.

WELLS has had ups and downs in popular favor. He was one of the great trinity: Shaw, Wells and Bennett, of whom one is now dead, another has become more a public figure than a leader, and the third, Wells himself, is still worried about the fate of humanity.

I suppose his fear is that he may be remembered as the author of Dickensian novels, and not as the idealist who offered a practical Utopia which the world rejected. I think that he will be remembered as the man who gave, in fiction, the best picture of the world which was ruined by the war—and indicated why it deserved to be ruined.

THERE is a cheap reprint of "Tono-Bungay," by all odds the best of Wells' novels written just before the enthusiasm he had for human beings was overcast by his worry about the fate of society. Everything is in balance in that book, and I can read it every three years or so with increasing pleasure.

There is the magnificent opening page which is in itself a cross-cut of England before the war, ending: "And once (though it was the most incidental thing in my life) I murdered a man ..." And there is the sad romantic close of the book: "We are all things that make and pass, striving upon a hidden mission, out to the open sea."

In between is the story of a life tangled into the story of a business. It happens to be the story of a bad patent medicine and the story of high finance, a forerunner of Kruger and Insull.

It is also the story of the breakdown of the Victorian era, the old culture, and the emergence of the new, with all its courage and all its dishonesty. A magnificent book.

WELLS is distinguished by this: that after he had given us the society which fell to pieces, he wrote, not in his later negligible fiction, but in his excellent "Outline of History," a complete record of the efforts human beings had made to save themselves from disorder and anarchy and destruction. He went on to indicate the path by which civilization could reach a safe place.

To the radicals, he is an old-fashioned liberal; to the reactionaries he is a dangerous dreamer. This does not prove that he is exactly right; but it shows why he is so illuminating a guide to the chaos of our time.

In 1909 when Tono-Bungay was written, giving the immortal Edward Pondrevo to the world, Wells was chiefly known as the author of fantastic romances—some, like "The Island of Dr. Moreau," have recently come to the movies. "The Time Machine" still captivates the imagination of men; "Mr. Polly" is still the best novel in the Dickens mode since Dickens died; "The First Men in the Moon" is still a good story. And Mr. Wells is still a phenomenal person. I wonder what he and the President talked about.

Please Bee-have!

MAINE this year won the distinction of reporting the first automobile accident attributed to a bee's sting. The bee stung the autoist, the car jumped a ditch and wrecked itself and a fine, upstanding tree. The accident happened a day or two after a warning had been broadcast that bees were a-wing and that autoists, in view of past seasons' happenings, had better beware.

A bee offers about the best alibi in the world for losing control of one's car. When a bee stings you, you are apt to be able for a little while to think about nothing else. And when you're driving a car a lot can happen in a very little while.

We don't know how fast a bee can fly—the authorities disagree. In order to sting you at the wheel, however, he does not have to travel as fast as you do, since he may make contact from the opposite direction or even at an angle. In any event, even if you're curious, we don't advise experiments. Let the bee be.

The New England bee is said to have a special penchant for flying in on petting parties. You ask what attracts him? For all we know it may be the honeyed words.

In the Park

After day's noise and tumult
We sat alone in the park.
Down from the tree's long branches
Dropped the sweet fruit of dark.

IT takes a lawyer to explain
The working of the Legal Brain
And clarify
What you and I
Don't understand about it,
For instance why the Lawyer's mind
Trained to uphold the law, can find
Within the books
Such ways for crooks
Quite legally to flout it.

THE lawyer's job (or so we hear)
Is to make laws and statutes clear
(If you agree
To pay a fee
Whenever they demand it).
Why is it then, that when they draw
An ordinary act of law
Its simplest phrase
Is such a maze
No one can understand it?

AND Legal Ethics! What they mean
Has ever puzzled my poor bean
They don't prevent Much evident
Shenanigan—the fact is That Legal Ethics simply are
An aid to Members of the Bar
Which make correct
And circumspect
Whatever they may practice!

IN brief, the Lawyer plies his trade
Because the laws are Lawyer-made
And so, of course,
We must perforce,
Seek Legal lore about them;
But, had the lawyers all been hung
When jurisprudence still was young
We would, I swan,
Have muddled on
Quite happily without them!

WALT WHITMAN

By JOSEPH AUSLANDER

HOW young Walt Whitman left Long Island and went to Brooklyn and New York, how he wrote for various papers and edited some of them, how several stories of his appeared in magazines—Poe printed a few in the Messenger—how he finally published a novel against drunkenness—all that is a long and not overinteresting tale. Nor was his verse at the time particularly exciting. It was rhymed, well-metred and unimportant.

As a matter of fact, the really important thing he was doing all these early years was what people called his loafing. Young Walt Whitman never seemed to be in a hurry. Something of a Broadway dandy, carrying a cane, wearing a bud in his buttonhole, he would stop on his way to the office to watch workmen tinning a roof or to chat with a policeman. He saw the crowds pouring from the ferryboats. He rode on the Broadway omnibuses by the hour. He sat there beside Broadway Jack the Jehu, or Pop Rice, or Old Elephant. Jack or Pop would spin a yarn. Walt would recite Julius Caesar.

AT night, in the city, he went constantly to theatres and opera houses. One night at the theatre he met a genial Southern gentleman. The two had a friendly drink together (in spite of Walt's novel on temperance), and the Southern gentleman persuaded the young journalist to come to New Orleans and help start a newspaper there. So away went Whitman across the Alleghenies and down the Mississippi drinking in and storing up vivid glimpses of the great untamed and stirring new country, America.

Perhaps his life in New Orleans helped him to understand what he wanted to do. He seems at least to have grown up there. Partly it may have been getting away from home and looking at his past life from a distance. Partly it may have been falling in love. For, while Whitman never would tell much of what happened on his trip South, we know he met in New Orleans some woman, apparently of great fineness and intelligence, who influenced his life deeply. However this may be, he seems to have been more mature from this time on, and it was not long after his return from New Orleans that he began to plan a daring and tremendous work.

This was nothing less than the making over of American poetry. Whitman, now thirty years of age, felt that the poems Americans were making had little to do with the new throbbing America he had seen. Where, he must have asked himself, is the real America in poems like Poe's The Raven or Longfellow's Evangeline? He surely read and thought upon Emerson's words: "Why should we grope among the dusty bones of the past? Why should we not also have an original relation to the universe?" At any rate, the idea struck him of writing a poetry, free and big-voiced, that should have in it the pulse of the prairies, the pinewoods the seashores, the cities, the plantations.

HE left the world of newspapers and magazines and went to work as a carpenter with his brothers. At night he wrote and wrote. His poems grew into a book. He tramped down to Orient Point and read the book and flung it into the ocean. It was no good.

He wrote again and again. And when he had made his fifth version of these poems he put down his carpenter's tools and went to a little printing shop in Brooklyn. There (it was the year 1855) with his own hands he set the type of a small volume called Leaves of Grass.

(This is the second of four articles on Walt Whitman.)

Old Cellar

THE house was lost to the weather
Years and green years ago,
Between the mounds where its walls were
The briars and blackberries grow.
But the cinnamon roses that flanked it
Have not run wild even now
The bees in the blossoms seem tame ones,
And the land has the look of the plow.
The woodchucks that lodge in the cellar
Have kept up the path to the spring,
You could fancy that men were there plowing
The way all the robins sing.
A woman shut in her sunbonnet
Might come any minute and call
The children home to the dinner
They never had outgrown at all.
A home is a hard place to ruin
For even the running years;
There is nothing so hard to cover
As traces of sweat and tears.

THE VITAL SEX

American Woman Is Alive, She Can Dream

Says JAMES M. CAIN

WOMEN, as a rule, seem to be worse travelers than men. To men, a ride on a train is merely a sentence to sit, something to be got over with as easily as possible. But to women it seems to be some sort of emotional ordeal. They appear to identify it with hospitals, dentists' offices, and spells of heat in the summer time, for they do an endless routine of adjusting their clothes, of getting comfortable, of leaning back on the cushions with a look of heroic fortitude on their faces. Whether they get train sick, or have a fixation they are going to get killed in a wreck, or what, I don't know; yet the obvious fact is that they make a grand tragic business out of what, to me, is what it is to any other man: a bore and nothing more.

But when you sit down beside them in a club car, and get to talking with them, and presently haul them off to the diner for lunch, I must say they are much better company than their husbands. The average American man, on a Pullman, is perhaps the most tiresome wight ever seen anywhere. He is always reminded of an experience he had one time, and his experience reminds the fellow across the aisle of an experience he had one time, and if there is one thing I hate worse than one experience it is another experience.

BUT the older I get the better I like his wife. Her ideas, to be sure, are not much better than his, for such things are the product of time, space and the chief industry of the town you live in. But they are put forward with modesty, a touch of charming shyness, with none of the appalling assurance that he has. Furthermore, she is nicely dressed, has beautiful table manners, and a lively curiosity about food, drink, and the pleasant things of life. And finally, over the coffee, if she is sure you don't know her address and she is never going to see you again, she will tell you of her dreams, the big event she is sure, one day, will happen in her life.

I suppose that is really why I like her. The American man can't dream. His business, his golf, and a vaguely hoped-for date with some pretty girl are the extent of his imaginings. But she can dream. You can pen her up in an eight-room house, you can chain her to seven women's clubs and a church society, you can tie five kids to her apron strings and hang a cook, a maid, and a chauffeur around her neck, and you can't kill that spark of something or other that seems to be the chief characteristic of her sex. She's alive.

ALLOW ME TO SAY

Bringing a Bit of the Country to the City, Says

CHAS. HANSON TOWNE

ANYONE who has long been shut up in a sounding city knows the joy of stealing a bit of the country and transplanting it to the town. A bit of dogwood snatched from a scented lane and brought in one's arms in the subway will give several days of pleasure to any of us. A poet once said that just as one little spray of lavender will be enough to perfume a queen's wardrobe, so the fragrance of one blossom will permeate a whole house.

The pathetic desire for window-boxes that you see sometimes, even in the slums of a vast city, is an indication of that unconscious craving for beauty, no matter how sordid our surroundings. Men build towns and then they strive all their days, as men will, to get back to the country they have deserted.

A movement like that of "the simple life" is nothing but the expression of whole nations, literally, for the best in this transitory existence. It is an epidemic of sentiment—only, it is a wholesome epidemic, though it reveals a sickness of the heart and spirit. That it is contagious we all know. It dies down after a while; but it will come back, and the next generation will be as subject to it as we were. For none escape that deep craving for simplicity, if we are wise at all. The fatter we grow the more surely will the pendulum swing the other way until we pine for lean days.

I HAVE some friends in a great city who, no matter where they live, insist upon a glimpse of garden from their windows. If they cannot have a patch of green of their own they will settle opposite a park; but they have a knack of turning the meanest little dirt pile into a tiny Eden, minus the serpent, and they are never so happy as when experimenting with some bulb or shoot, or endeavoring to train some fractious vine to climb a fence. They can make a pergola of a barrel, and out of a flat-iron they can miraculously evolve a sun dial. An old basin, cleverly camouflaged with green, becomes a bathing place for visiting sparrows, and a dilapidated peach-basket in their hands suddenly finds itself a haughty urn, filled with geraniums of many colors.

They have that genius for making ugly things beautiful that can scarcely be acquired; yet it is interesting to note that when they begin transforming some untidy back yard into a little paradise the neighbors peep from surrounding windows, at first with smiles on their faces, and then surreptitiously start in to furbish up their own foot of earth. For a healthy tendency, like a sickly one, is catching; and I have seen a whole row of yards begin to blossom like Aaron's rod after these friends of mine have moved into a certain street. The best part of it is that when they move away, as sometimes they have to do, they leave so much loveliness behind them that they are not forgotten for many a day.

READING-WRITING

By WILLIAM SOSKIN

AN AUTHOR'S prefatory note to the effect that his novel is the first of a series of six novels intended to portray the contemporary scene usually dismays me. It is true that a Forsyte Saga expanded in a number of volumes achieves a certain mass validity and a solid momentum which it could not have in a lesser volume. But there are so few Galsworthys and so many untutored novelists who feel that they can portray the entire contemporary scene.

Miss Storm Jameson's new novel, Company Parade, starts with a warning that it is to be followed by some five volumes and with the author's simple apology for "not being able in one volume to tell all she knows about the men and women in it." This humbleness is, of course, disarming. What is more, Miss Jameson is one of the few British writers whose dramatization of the "contemporary scene" would interest me. She belongs to that middle generation which regards itself as the victim of the war. She writes with that intense bitterness, that complete disillusion to which her war-bitten comrades retreated after they realized that they had been betrayed by the "human progress" idealists of the generation that preceded them.

Here in America we have no class of young people quite so tragically stricken by war. We regard it as a horror to be shunned and avoided by civilized society—but we were not in it long enough to feel that horror in our bloodstreams quite as powerfully as do the Robert Graves, the Richard Aldingtons and the Storm Jamesons in England. When the war reached down over a number of years and visited economic collapse upon us it became quite the bromidic and ordinary thing to regard war as a monstrous thing with no grain of the heroic or romantic in it. For most of us, I suspect, that attitude was a cerebral one.

Miss Jameson's Company Parade is a picture of the people stricken by this disease. The social body she portrays may recover from it before she is through with the picture; but she gives us something more than a diagram of a body with an incidental sore upon it.

IT IS not a casual or graceful futility which possesses the young people of Company Parade. The girl Hervey Russell, who is the protagonist of the entire work, married a young man who went off to the front and bore him a son. Before the war she had a few quiet friends, interests, a country that was alive, a city of London that was not a corpse over which crowds of insects swarmed, dreams and ambitions that were something more than a dark sort of futility.

Now the war is over. Hervey's husband is a romantic, careless, selfish and rather stupid young man. He requires mothering. She is gentle toward him in his weakness. And when Hervey discovers that he has had a mistress even during his leaves from the front, the combination of jealousy and shame which overcomes her is too much for her.

Hervey has two friends—her own kind, in a sense. Both of them are bowed down by the war. One, Philip, who loved her, dies, a victim of disease caused by his wounds. The other, David, tortured by his physical disabilities also, leaves his advertising job to edit an intellectual magazine. She helps David in that. The magazine fails. Hervey writes a couple of novels, one of them well received by the critics, but they offer no solution for her economic or emotional problems.

MISS JAMESON does not pretend to have much happen in this first volume. Her effort lies, rather, in the direction of presenting Hervey as a completely unorientated girl, her ancestral past cut away from her by the war, her standards self-evolved. She almost yields to a brass and physically impelling American—but doesn't. She finds cruelty in employers, industrialists who are already merchandizing death, smooth lady editors of sensuously cultural magazines, soft young men who are becoming successes with their tongues in their cheek. She comes to know the publisher who never evaded the least clause of a contract—"he flourished on the disorders which have infected our civilization, because he accepted the conditions of disorder—that there are no spiritual standards of reference, no human values—the only universally acknowledged value is success, and the only alternative to success is failure."

All this Miss Jameson writes in stark honesty. She is the least pretentious and the most candid of the English writing ladies. One feels the iron in her marrow constantly. Her heroine will apparently make some sort of reasoned solution of life. At the end of the book she is already dedicating herself to her son's life.

I suspect that Company Parade is the start of a notable literary work.

VAGABONDIA

Scenery Dull Compared to People and Cities

Insists BRUNO LESSING

VENTIMIGLIA—If you are interested in scenery you will travel far to find a stretch that surpasses the Italian Riviera between Genoa and Ventimiglia. Towering mountains on one side, the blue sea on the other and an interminable succession of white towns snuggling in sunlit coves. The only drawback is that when you've seen it a dozen times the thrill gets feeble.

I'M not much interested in scenery. Many people are. It's a matter of taste. To me scenery is too static. Of course, it changes according to the light of the sun or the moon or the stars. But, as the French say, the more it changes the more it is the same. One glimpse is usually enough to absorb it, admire it and tuck it away in the cells of memory. To be sure one can drag in the change of seasons and the change of the spectator's mood. But the mountain remains a mountain and the sea is always a sea.

Cities, villages, hamlets and people always struck me as being vastly more interesting than scenery. They're never the same today as they were yesterday. In Savona which is near Genoa, I learned that a chap whom I knew well had died. Which changed Savona for me. I hear that the abolition of Prohibition has changed New York. I'm curious to see for myself.

IN addition to the scenery, though, this neck of the woods between Genoa and the French frontier is rich in memories of countless generations of humanity that traveled to and fro during the many centuries that built up what we call our civilization. It was along this path that the religions of Egypt, the art of Greece and the learning of Rome traveled into the ken of our barbarian ancestors. This is the road that Caesar took when he set out to conquer the lands that are now France and Spain and England.

How the world has changed since that day! Julius Caesar himself, if he were to come back for a day, would be speechless to behold the difference. Yet there are two things that are the same today as they were in his time. One is the goodness or the badness of human beings. The other is scenery.

The coastal Alps and the shimmering Mediterranean looked the same to Julius Caesar 2000 years ago as they do to every Cook's tourist today.

THE beautiful Riviera di Ponente! Pegli, Savona, Spotorno, Finale, Ligure, Marina, Alassio, Albenga, San Remo, Bordighera and Genoa. All picturesque and fascinating habitations of modern humans who read newspapers and get a daily idea of the big happenings in America, Asia and Africa. Yet they are the direct successors of Romans and Goths and Gauls and Lombards who dwelt here in turn during twenty centuries, and thought, during most of that time, that the earth was a flat little island.

MANY incongruities. Savona has 30,000 workmen employed in the steel industry. Bordighera provides palm leaves for the Catholic, Jewish and Mohammedan churches. San Remo is the modern Monte Carlo of Italy. And a dozen of these towns provide the fish for half of Italy. All up-to-date industries.

Gambling in San Remo is a triumph of cash over conscience. Italy has always had public lotteries, but the government frowned upon card games and roulette. The hotel keepers of the Italian Riviera complained that they were losing a lot of business because tourists were attracted by the gambling casinos of the French Riviera. So Mussolini gave San Remo the privilege of establishing a casino where everybody can play chemin-de-fer, baccarat, trente-et-quarante and roulette. And now tourists from all over the world flock there. One out of 10,000 wins.

I don't see any immorality in gambling—if I'm correct in my definition of morality. Economically, it's great if you win and idiotic if you lose. Inasmuch as you lose 99 times out of 100 I think it's the stupidest instinct we mortals possess.

LISTEN, Harry. We gotta get one of these antique numbers. Old spinning wheel. Old water mill. Old covered bridge. Know what I mean? Now take like this, Harry. What do you remember from when you was a kid? Yeah. That's it. Whadda you remember from—The old Old Law flat down in Platt Street? Nuts Now take like—The old iron steamb—Nope. Well how about—Yep. Yep. I got it. I think I got it. The—Old—Subway—Stop Howzat? Howzit sound to you, huh? Now let's see. Maybe we could have it go something like this: There's an old—There's an old subway stop on the corner. Okeh?

There's an old subway stop on the corner
Where the pushcart man used to stand.

Yeah. Yeah. That's it.

Where the pushcart man used to stand
With a load of bandannas and kettles
And a herring in his hand.

What? That ain't old American stuff? Say, listen. If one of those guys ever sold anything under five years old—What's he doing with the herring? Demonstrating it? Oh. Wisenheimer, eh? Listen, kid. If we don't get a number pretty soon we're gonna be demonstrating soup at a relief station. Come on. Let's try it again. The old—

TRICKERY CHARGED IN MOVE TO KILL M'LEOD BILL

Washington, May 16—Slick parliamentary maneuvering by House Majority Leader Byrns to ditch the McLeod bill and two other measures precipitated a riotous session in the House.

Amid cries of "trickery," "I resent that," "let's stnd by our leaders," the body broke up in confusion last night after trying vainly for an hour to consider private calendar bills for the relief of various individuals.

With only a handful of members present, Byrns, in tones scarcely audible, moved to adjourn until Thursday and from Thursday until Monday next. The motion carried.

This left only one day—Thursday—on which to file petitions to insure a vote May 28 on the McLeod bank depositors payoff bill, the Connery 30-hour week labor bill and the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill.

Outraged at this move, backers of the three bills determined to object to all private bills at the session. These measures require unanimous consent for passage.

These tactics led to the confusion which caused the riotous adjournment. After incessant bickering, Rep. Goss, (R) of Connecticut, rose to plead with the members to overlook the leader's action and pass the pending private bills. He said:

"There are plenty of ways in which the minority can command respect for its wishes. We can block adjournment until these three bills get to the floor."

Immediately, Rep. Blanton, (D) of Texas, resenting the criticism against the leadership, moved to adjourn. While members laughed, jeered and demanded order, Byrns entered and repeated the motion to adjourn. Rep. Parsons, (D) of Illinois, in the chair, ruled the motion carried after a standing vote.

The three bills sidetracked by Byrns are opposed by the Administration. All three would be brought before the House for a vote May 28, however, if the petitions now circulated should have had 145 names by Friday night.

McLeod Bill—118 signers—27 names needed.

Frazier-Lemke Bill—136 signers—9 names needed.

The American Federation of Labor promised Rep. Connery, (D) of Massachusetts, author of the 30-hour week bill, all the strength at its command to get his petition completed Thursday.

Declaring the Byrns move was designed to forestall action on his bill, Rep. McLeod, (R) of Michigan, said:

"We are far from giving up. I am sure we'll have the 145 names by Thursday night.

Pay Bank Depositors

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS:

As an important help toward national recovery, the undersigned urges passage of the McLeod Bill, now before Congress, which provides for paying in full depositors of closed banks which belonged to the Federal Reserve System.

Toward this end I urge that the RFC make loan arrangements with the closed banks.

This procedure would give positive stimulus to business by converting frozen, idle and at present useless bank deposits into immediately available purchasing power.

I urge immediate congressional action on the McLeod Bill.

M'GRADY EYES DOCK STRIKE

By Associated Press

San Francisco, May 16—Pacific coast shipping was near paralysis today as federal officials sought to end the week-old strike of longshoremen.

While Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady was reported coming here to assist in settlement of the difficulties, approximately 3000 seamen were said to have voted to walk out in sympathy with the dockworkers.

Numerous industrial plants dependent upon water transportation have shut down and others prepared to follow suit.

Lumber mills were to be closed in Longview, Wash., tonight, throwing 3000 men out of work; two mills employing 900 men closed in Everett, Wash.

NEW HONOR FOR HEGENBERGER

By Associated Press

Washington, May 16—The Army pilot who made the first solo flight in a hooded cockpit, using only instruments to guide him, is to receive an oak cluster for his distinguished flying cross.

Secretary Dern said today he would present the cross Friday to the pilot, Capt. Albert F. Hegenberger, a native of South Boston, Mass., now stationed at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio.

Hegenberger recently testified at hearings by the special army aviation committee, which resumed work today. It is attempting to work out a policy for improvement of the service.

The oak leaf cluster indicates that Hegenberger already wears the distinguished flying cross for his flight from California to Hawaii in 1928.

DILLINGER CAR HUNTED IN N. Y.

By International News Service

New York, May 16 (INS)—The Dillinger scare flared up suddenly in New York today when a general police alarm was sent out over radio and teletype directing all radio cars and policemen in the city and nearby towns to be on the lookout for a large sedan carrying seven men and Indiana license plates.

The license number was given as 715314—Indiana.

Early today the car was seen crossing Bear Mountain bridge and headed toward New York. The police alarms, which failed to given the make and color of the car, did not say that Dillinger was in it, but that the occupants were to be questioned on general suspicion.

It was said, however, that the possibility Dillinger might be in the car was responsible for the general alarm.

At the request of City Censor Herbert L. McNary, certain changes have been made in the last act of "The Green Bay Tree," which is now playing at the Hollis st. Theatre.

City Censor McNary stated that he had not received any complaints but had seen the performance himself and decided that certain changes were necessary.

Woman Guilty In Library Theft

Miss Kathleen Cochran, 29, of Jewett st., Newton, arraigned in Newton court today before Judge John C. Lynch, charged with the larceny of a book from the Newton Free Library, was found guilty and placed on probation

Sarah S. Wood, assistant librarian, testified that she saw Miss Cochran leave the library with the book. Catching up with her on the library walk, Miss Wood accused her of the theft, and charged that Miss Cochran said that she had no intention of registering the book at the desk.

Annie Doesn't Live Here Any More

"Annie" might have been hungry, but anyway, she started to eat her tail. They found her dead, this afternoon floating in the bowl, her body half devoured. She had turned self-cannibal.

Students haunting the library of the Boston University School of Medicine this morning were amazed to see "Annie," the pet salamander which graced the bowl in the rear of the room, suddenly turn on itself and eat its lower extremities.

Baffled medicos summoned a corps of professors to diagnose this strange malady and supply the suitable remedy. Medical science, however, proved unavailing.

Early this afternoon when the medical students returned from their luncheon, black cloth enveloped the bowl in the rear of the library. Pinned to the crepe was this tender eulogy, "Annie doesn't live here any more."

New Bedford, May 16—Joseph Texeira, Norton farmer, today started a two-month term in the House of Correction here for maintaining a still in his hencoop. Sentence was imposed in U. S. District Court by Judge Ira L. Letts.

PLANE MISSES EMPIRE TOWER

By Associated Press

New York, May 16—Col. James C. Fitzmaurice, transatlantic flier, said today a plane piloted by Maj. James R. Doolittle missed crashing into the towering Empire State building by only 20 feet yesterday.

Doolittle was piloting the Irish flier from Washington to New York.

"We flew through the rain and fog," Fitzmaurice said, "because we wished to reach New York in time for a dinner in my honor.

"The Empire State building loomed up suddenly and we were fortunate to miss colliding with it."

Malden Burglars Choose Best Rum

When it comes to liquor, Malden's burglars have the taste of connoisseurs. They proved this last night, when some of them broke into the Twin City Liquor Store at 486 Ferry st. Not one drop of blended or new stuff did they touch, but today the owners missed $1000 worth of their choicest stock.

SHIP MAN HELD IN DEATH TRIAL

By The Associated Press

San Francisco, May 16—The verdict of the coroner's jury recommending that Millard Hickman, shipping official, be held for trial for killing Louise Jeppesen, Ogden, Utah, debutante, was added today to a grand jury indictment.

"Although the evidence is not complete," read the verdict, "we recommend that Hickman be held for trial."

Companions in a party attended late Saturday by Hickman and Miss Jeppesen were among witnesses at the inquest. One of them, Tommy Dee, said that when the party broke up at 2 a. m., Hickman and the girl remained in Hickman's apartment.

It was not long after that, police charge, that Miss Jeppesen was murdered.

"Can you prove that Old Gold is easier on the Throat?"

asks

George Raft

[An Old Gold smoker since 1932, he seeks to convince a doubting friend]

Dear Mr. Raft:—

On March 9, 1934, we invited a congress of the greatest taste experts in America to smoke and compare the four leading cigarettes, with the names concealed, and select the cigarette they considered "smoothest"; and therefore easier on the throat and nerves.

The invitation was accepted. Sixty-nine wine tasters, coffee tasters, tea tasters and cocoa experts took part.

In repeated tests by these taste authorities, Old Gold was chosen as the smoothest brand. If that evidence isn't enough to convince your friend . . . ask him to try Old Golds for a few days and let his own taste decide.

Sincerely,
P. LORILLARD COMPANY, INC.
ESTABLISHED 1760

P. S.—Old Gold's smoothness isn't an accident, Mr. Raft: No better tobacco grows than is used in Old Gold. And it's pure. That's why Old Golds are easy on the THROAT and NERVES.

This Is Life

ROBERT E. ROGERS

I do not often attempt to sit or work out of doors. I am essentially an indoor person. Wind gets in my hair and blows the ashes out of my pipe and ruffles the leaves of my book and scatters the leaves of whatever bit of writing I happen to be working on and blows about my examination papers and disturbs such ideas as I have. Better an easy chair in a corner, out of the draft, and silence all about.

Robert E. Rogers

But this afternoon it is very pleasant to do what F. P. A. the dean of columnists calls his "stint," out in the open. Not so hot as a week ago when we let the furnace out, not so cool as last mid-week when ice froze—so they tell us—in the country puddles. Just nice!

Nature's pet secret, chlorophyl—now likely to remain a secret since Conant has become president of Harvard and dropped his chemistry—has worked wonderfully well this spring. Never, it seems, have we had such a wealth of fresh, lush green

It will get dusty as the spring wears on and summer comes. And the new seeded grass, like fuzz on a baby's head, will grow tall and coarse in our clayey ground that responds but ill to fertilizer and water and care. But the great copper beech that overhangs my neighbor's yard and the tall, column-like poplars will only mature with the summer and the sun. The pale Japanese lilacs and the sweet white lilacs will drop their bloom—alas!—before Memorial Day. The crocuses have gone, the daffodils are going and the tulips—why do spring flowers pass so quickly?—but we shall not mind so much. We shall not be here

The forsythia failed us, all but one tiny pale bush. Cambridge looks rather lost without her great masses of the most springtime of all spring shrubs, but the rhododendron is budding for all it is worth and ought to be splendid by the time the boys and girls begin to graduate. Our privets were not killed, for which thanks be! And there is plenty of evergreen around the yard and in the environs to stand dark and cool in the hottest days.

In short, it is the kind of spring day which makes me glad I live in New England. From the West we hear dreadful tales of burning sun and dark choking dust clouds—of which we caught a whiff a day or two ago to give us a faint apprehension of what they might be like for a steady diet—and drought and thirst and no hope. The crops dying in the baked soil, the beasts tottering with weakness and falling down under the heat and dying of lack of water and fodder—and Uncle Sam rushing once more to the rescue.

Let us be thankful to our ancestors who found New England as we know it and were content to remain here. Harsh and rocky of soil — arida nutrix, the dry nurse of New England men — cold and difficult in winter but seldom drouthy save for a week or two in summer, and in the spring and fall a delight to make glad the heart.

The rest of them went West. We stayed here Who went? The bold and adventurous, the greedy and avaricious, the unsatisfied, the slack and shiftless, the failures, the discontented and the optimistic—all the unbalanced people who made the great West and now expect the old folks at home to support them in their empire.

They call us effete back here in the East because they think we feared to venture a-pioneering They are in their own conceit the salt of the earth the true Americans. Well, mebbe

I suspect that the folk who stayed in New England and let the others do the exploring were the followers of the Golden Mean that Aristotle talked about. The sober, middle-of-the-road people. They did not dread the hard winters nor the laborious work. They knew they had the New England spring and fall and the short reticent New England summer. They had the masterless, the unharvested sea—and they mastered and harvested it and came to think it a friendly monster

They hear of the Eldorados of the West, with all its golden wealth of ore and grain, and the freedom of the prairies, and they said: "This is good enough. We'll stay right here and try to get a living somehow." They got it and they held on to it and now they are trying to protect it from the pioneering states that would despoil them.

"T'aint ideal, but it's good enough for folks with common sense and their heads screwed on the right way and a habit of steady work and a capacity for doing without and making the most of what you have, and the conviction that a bird in the hand's worth two in the bush and a rolling stone gathers no moss and a half a loaf is better than no bread and charity begins at home. If you have those qualities you will get along most anywheres. You don't have to go West, young man even though the course o'empire does Westward take its way. New England's good enough."

I guess they were right. And certainly I wouldn't exchange any number of acres of burning wheat land plus the "Western spirit" for this little backyard in the cool green of a New England spring.

Candid Camera on Common

"Push over, dollie—doggie is tired." That's what Joan Wetherald, three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royal Wetherald, of 130 Chestnut st., Boston, told her doll, as the Candid Camera clicked.

Little Virginia Morton, of 93 Mortimer st., Dorchester, trying to fatten up some pigeons in the Public Garden. Such scenes convince all that spring is really here.

"Take-a your pitch—only ten cents." That's the cry of a rival of Candid Camera, the itinerant photographer, who always attracts a motley crowd wherever he goes.

TWO ARRAIGNED IN MALDEN SEIZURE

Slips Found as U. S. Agents and Police Seek Narcotics

The seizure early today of lottery tickets with a face value of more than $250,000 caused the arraignment of two men in Malden district court charged with setting up and promoting a lottery

They were Hyman Shapiro, 34 of 296 Cross st., Malden and Arthur Greenberg, 32, who said that he lived temporarily at 125 Peterboro st., in the Back Bay, although his permanent address is the Hotel Taft, New York

Both men pleaded not guilty and were held in $1000 bail each by Judge Elbridge G. Davis. May 12 was set as the date for a hearing The tickets were fund in a Boylston st., Malden, garage

The discovery of the pool tickets, the largest amount ever seized in the Boston area and probably in New England, came after Charles Burrows, chief narcotic agent for the New England division, and six assistants visited Malden police headquarters and asked for officers to accompany them on a planned raid.

Sergts. Joseph B. Henry and William J. McDermott were assigned to accompany them and the party went directly to a garage in Boylston st., that city There they found a man, who gave his name as Shapiro

He said he had just parked his auto in the garage and was going home. The federal agents noticed a number of cartons in the machine and others piled on the floor of the garage

Burrows broke open a carton in the belief he had come upon the illegal narcotics. Instead, he found the cartons contained tickets on the Gold Bond Baseball Pool, the Treasury balance and a combination baseball pool and treasury balance type of ticket

Burrows told the Malden officers the case was in their jurisdiction, and the two sergeants arrested Shapiro and seized the auto and the tickets, which they brought to Malden headquarters.

Checkup revealed the auto was registered to a New York man and, after questioning Shapiro, the Malden officers went to Boston police headquarters, and later to a house in Peterboro st., Back Bay, where they arrested Greenberg

Maniac on Trawler At Sea, Help Called

Capt. John Asgelsson of the Boston steam trawler, Holy Cross, reported an insane man aboard, in a wireless call for assistance sent to the coastguard authorities here

The coastguard cutter Mojave from Gloucester was immediately sent to the trawler's position 240 miles from Boston, off the Western Banks

Everett Phone Charges Cited

Charging that hundreds of telephone calls are being made at the expense of the taxpayers by city employes from one office to another in the same building and that hundreds more personal calls are charged to the city, Councilman Frederick L. 'Boy of Streets' Defended by Fitzgerald in Row

"The boy who grows up on the the streets and has to work for his education can become just as successful in the business world as the minister's son or the boy who is descended from Puritan forbears."

Thus spoke John F Fitzgerald, ex-mayor of Boston in voicing his opinion on a meeting of the American Eugenics Society held in New York yesterday where business men were advised to employ the sons and daughters of ministers and Puritans.

"Such men as Henry Ford, Andrew Mellon, Julius Rosenwald, Al Smith, and Col Lindbergh surely aren't descended from missonaries or Puritans," said Fitzgerald, "but they seem to have managed to achieve a bit of success nevertheless."

The former mayor admitted that there was truth in the statement that ministers' sons and young men of Puritan stock often make fine business men but branded as ridiculous any statement to the effect that they invariably surpassed all others in ability

"In fact," Fitzgerald added, "they often lack the advantages gained from contacts with the outside world

Fitzgerald pointed out that many of the earliest settlers of New England were repeatedly jailed on such charges as drunkenness, perjury, rioting and creating public disturbance in general

18 AT HOSPITAL MAY LOSE JOBS

Reports that 18 elevator operators at City hospital are to be discharged and their places filled by welfare workers, were heard at city hall today

Dr. John J Dowling, hospital superintendent, admitted that he had discussed with Joseph Norton, plant superintendent there, the possibility of dispensing with services of some operators on the ground that their work is unnecessary.

Dr. Dowling stated, however, that he had no knowledge of plans to substitute welfare workers. No action has been taken he said

Walter V. McCarthy director of the welfare, was unable to confirm the assignment.

SCULLY, EX-AID CHIEF, HURT

John T Scully former federal emergency relief director whose home is at Cohasset was injured today when the car he was riding in struck a tree and overturned in Washington st., North Weymouth

Scully was being driven to Boston by his elder son George, 26. With him also were his two other children, Edward, 22, and Ruth 20, one of the Magnolia Dramatic Players.

According to George Scully, he lost control when the steering shackle broke. Scully was taken to his South Main st. home in Cohasset where he is under treatment for injuries to his head and back

O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK

DAY BY DAY

On the Way, May 16—Out the window mile after mile of dat ol' debble desert. An ocean of dreary sand-wastes dotted with jets of lifeless sage. Mile after mile. Sage and sand. It's a Biblical prophecy that some day it will bloom like the rose. And the Mojave already nears that fulfilment

O. O. McIntyre

On a rocky outcrop a long-eared jack-rabbit poised a quizzical second and was off in a flash, like humanity rushing from imaginative fears. Now and then across the expanse civilization lifts a sun-baked head in an adobe hut or an abandoned box car on a siding.

Arizona has always an eerie beauty at night. The moon tints a patina of heavenly pinks over the yellow scarps, rising like suddenly puffed sails in sheer beauty. Even above the car wheels the mystery is heightened now and then by a thin and long-drawn-out tremulous cry. One thinks of lost souls.

Arizona has shared well in Nature's bounty, save in one particular—water. It is as though a great painter had finished his mighty canvas without the most important stroke. After two fumbles, I made a flying tackle for "Anthony Adverse" crossing the American Sahara. I've been wrong. It's a grand book.

More endless wastelands where, incongruous enough, evergreen meanders playfully. I commend this phenomenon as a topic for pulpiteers. Beauty always, even in the jumping off places. And how exquisite the agony of aching thirst! The desert's parched lips in eternal supplication. How I go on! But this is just old-fashioned hemstitching stuff. Remind me sometime to turn on all the adjectives and get flowery. After the desert I'd like to tune up for a good waterfall. Nothing cascades a vocabulary like a mountain of rushing water

To while the tedium in the club car we fell to telling of train wrecks—happy inspiration! The bright young man from Washington, D. C., was reminded of an engineer he knew in Barstow, which we were approaching. A devoted family man, the engineer always waved from his cab to his happy family grouped in the door of their home near Barstow. One evening he was indulging the customary salute, looked down the track and too near for warning saw two of his children strolling down the tracks. In the long silence I grabbed the hook and cried: "How horrible! Were they killed?" The smart alec replied: "No. The train, recognizing them, jumped right over!" Grandma always told me never to fall in with strangers traveling.

I remarked to the Clare Briggs-looking dining room steward today that I never tasted fish save on trains and chiefly when crossing a desert Students of analogy could doubtless explain the fish and desert link. Certainly no two things could be more remote. The steward explained it was a common gastronomic yearning. An extra supply of fish is always put aboard at the desert borders. With the rest of the suckers

Beyond Barstow landscape begins to color. Palm trees sway in gentle whisper. Clouds of alkali vanish before the sudden scent of wet-green orange groves Clumps of pony-high walnut trees shimmer like silver birch in the moonlight. The primitive adobe, its two windows shuttered like cataracted eyes, becomes a magnificent Spanish castle with candy-striped awnings and patio. It may be stagecraft—the triumph of man. But what other state has harnessed so much loveliness, natural or artificial? So here, California, is another softie In spats'

BLIND WIDOW LOSES PLEA

Mrs. Elizabeth Hayes, blind widow of a slain constable, has lost her fight in Lowell Probate court for revocation of a decree, granted in 1926 and appointing her the adopted parent of her husband's three children by a former marriage.

Judge John C. Leggat ruled that he was forced to decline jurisdiction under the law, which states that revocation of an adoption rests on proof of fraud in securing such a decree.

VIOLET SCENTED CUTICLE CREAM KEEPS NAILS SO EXQUISITELY SMOOTH AND DAINTY

Add Days to Life of Manicure And Remove Nail Ridges With New Softener

By Juliet Shelby

[illegible]-NAILS are badly over-worked. They have to wear coats of lacquered polish day in and day out, and in between times submit to pretty rough treatment with polish removers.

A little vaseline or tissue cream rubbed around the base of the nail at night will help keep the cuticle soft. Better yet—since it is a definite corrective, less greasy, and works right into the cuticle—is the new cream nail grower just brought out by a firm that was making manicure preparations back in the days when the only known polish was acquired with a pinkish powder, a chamois-covered buffer and your own elbow grease!

Put up in a small, gilt-topped jar to acquire this new nail grower wouldn't make much of a dent in anybody's silk purse. But often the best things come in the tiniest packages, and this is a pretty important item if you want beautiful nails—as who doesn't? And don't be alarmed by its title. It won't make your nails grow faster.

Rubbed into the cuticle at the base and around the sides and left on overnight, this cream is the grandest little strengthener in the world for thin, brittle nails. Its regular nightly use will help the nails grow smooth, without those pesky ridges which trouble most of us, and will counteract the dry condition which is so likely to remain after polish is removed.

Too harsh polish remover and incorrect shaping are often responsible for finger-nails breaking off. When you file your nails be sure not to dig into the quick at the corners. Use a flexible emory board rather than a steel file and, if you're a confirmed liquid polish user, be sure you get a good brand goes for removers, too.

Even one night of complete rest means an awful lot to finger-nails. Whenever you remove the polish or have it done, try to leave it off overnight, and massage the cream thoroughly into the cuticle. You can put on fresh polish the next day.

This nail grower comes in such a cute little jar and smells so good—like dewy Parma violets—that it would be a very smart idea to leave it permanently within arm's reach on your bedside table. Then you can rub a little on each nail the last thing after you've laid down the detective thriller and smoothed out the pillow.

If interested, telephone Juliet Shelby, Liberty 4000, and learn the name of this new cream nail-grower and where it can be purchased in Boston. If you prefer writing for this information, send along a stamped self-addressed envelope with your inquiry.

Smooth Eyelids Require Best of Care

Question: My eyelids are flabby and wrinkled and make-up doesn't seem to help. I have been using a light blue powder on my lids, but of course it doesn't hide the wrinkles.

G. T., Malden.

Answer: Naturally, no amount of make-up is going to help your eyelids. First tone the flesh by using an eye cream faithfully every night, placing the finger tip on the eyelid close to the nose, sweeping out to the temple, coming back under the eye. While the cream is on, iron with an ice cube that has first been covered with gauze. Slap on cotton pads that have been dipped in witch hazel. In the morning bathe the eyes first with warm water, then with cold.

Superfluous Hair

Question: Will you please tell me if the ammonia used in bleaching superfluous hair is the powdered variety or the liquid kind? Is it combined with peroxide?

D. F., Pawtucket, R. I.

Answer: The ammonia you refer to is the household variety known as Spirits of Ammonia. It is combined with peroxide when used in bleaching superfluous hair.

Cocoa Butter

Question: Please tell me where I can buy cocoa butter?

I. F., Broad Brook, Conn.

Answer: Cocoa butter may be purchased at any drug store or the cosmetic counters of department stores.

Acne Scars

Question:—Only a short while ago I had a beautiful complexion. Then I suddenly began picking at it, with the result that today I have a pimply skin. I am very discouraged, and am anxious to know whether there is something I can do to restore my skin to its former condition. Will scars left by acne eventually vanish?

I. P., East Boston.

Answer: Aggravating an infected skin is the worst thing you can do to your complexion. If you send along a stamped, self-addressed envelope, I will give you my leaflet on the treatment of acne and blackheads, and also the names of two preparations which will slowly "peel" your skin and rid it of the scars you mention. I would advise you to watch your diet very closely, and eat plenty of green vegetables and leafy salads. Go sparingly on sweets and pastries and drink plenty of water.

Strengthens Brittle Nails

If you would give utmost care to graceful, expressive hands, keep a cute little jar that smells of dewy Parma violets within arm's reach of your bedside table. It's the grandest little strengthener in the world for thin, brittle nails. The radiant beauty of Florence McKinney, screen star, is marked by the exquisite daintiness of her hands. Today Juliet Shelby tells of a new cream nail grower that works right into the cuticle—and yet is non-greasy.

SPELLING FINAL TO BE ON RADIO

By THE SPELLING BEE EDITOR

Thousands of persons who watched David Andrew Ward as he won, and others who are interested in the fate of Boston's Metropolitan Champion in the National Grade School Spelling Championships at Washington, D. C. on May 29 may tune in on the National spelling affray and either learn that David is the new National Champion or hear him in competition for the title.

The National Spelling Bee will be broadcast by the Columbia Broadcasting System at 11:15 o'clock (Eastern Standard Time) Tuesday morning, May 29.

Pupils contemplating participation in the Spelling Bee of next year and adults who have been won to a new interest in the subject through the enthusiasm engendered by the great contest sponsored by the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser will do well to be standing by while the National spell-down is in progress.

The finals will involve 19 Champions this year and the spelling bee final will be held in the New National Museum in Washington. Dean George B. Woods, of the College of Liberal Arts and Professor of English at American University will act as Chairman for the National Spelling Bee. The pronouncers of words will be Dean C. E. Hill, of George Washington University and Dr. H. E. Warner, of the Washington public schools.

David Andrew Ward, Boston's Metropolitan Champion, will receive $50 in the National Competition as a contestant and will have a chance at the sum of $500 awarded the winner. The speller placing second receives $300. Third, $100. Other sums are awarded according to achievement.

ERA KNITTING MILLS IS PLAN

State ERA Administrator Joseph P. Carney will confer with Thomas P. Wye today on plans for starting ERA knitting mills throughout the state to give employment to needy women with dependants.

Discussion of this project comes after the completing of a conference with Roswell G. Hall, City of Boston ERA administrator, on work projects to provide employment for some 9000 unskilled laborers.

The city's quota is 10,000, with unskilled labor being given the preference on ERA jobs and the skilled workers being taken care of on PWA projects.

While announcing plans, Administrator Carney again made it plain that it was impossible for the ERA to carry the entire burden of relief work in the state, a mistaken impression which, he said, is held by many.

He repeated the assertion that the ERA can do nothing for single men and women while those with two or more dependents have not been cared for by the relief administration.

Chickie's Daughter -:- By Elenore Meherin

CHAPTER 84.

Pippin went into her room. She leaned against the door, her mind faint, but a quick, warm clamor in her heart. Kevin was in the house.

He was in her mother's room. She heard him greet Helena in a sweet, gentle way as though he were Helena's son. She had always been dear to him. Kevin used to say, "Chickie was my first love."

Now they were in David's study.

Suddenly Pippin heard Kevin ask: "Pippin is in the house, is she not?"

David coming down the hall. David saying: "Kevin is here. Come out and see him."

David went back to Helena's room. She and Kevin were alone.

APPEARS PITIFUL

He stood there and looked at her. She was very thin, her hair peeled back, her eyes immense. They looked into his with a desperate blue shine.

Then Kevin said: "How are you, Pippin? You are very thin. But David says your mother is better."

"Doesn't she look awful to you, Kevin?"

"She would—naturally. You must expect this. She may seem worse than she is."

She could scarcely hear because of the tumult that swept up about her like a sea. He wanted to comfort her. Yet there were miles and bitter, resentful miles between them.

She said with a little tired smile: "I hope you were successful in your work. I hope the trip was pleasant to you."

Kevin said: "The work went well. You must be very lonely here. Shall I bring you some books? What sort of thing would you like?"

"Oh everybody in the world has sent me books. I can't read. I can't think. I'm so afraid!"

He took a step toward her. She felt very faint.

But Kevin frowned and halted: "It must be hard for you—very hard—cooped here."

"I don't mind that—not at all. But thinking of what may happen to her."

"Don't you trust your father, Pippin? Don't you feel that he will pull her through?"

"Do you believe in a power like that, Kevin?"

"I don't know. I've seen strange, mysterious things happen. Don't worry any more about Helena. You are in need of rest and a little care yourself."

She blinked and said, trembling: "I'm well—I feel so well!"

That was all.

She saw him every day. Sometimes they only nodded.

AT MOTHER'S BED

But he never talked of himself nor asked of her.

Pippin sat at her mother's bed and thought: "I don't care! God, just let Helena live—let her not be helpless! I won't care. I'll never say a word."

One day Pippin's hope altogether fled. Her mother's breath came in short, rapid gasps.

But what frightened Pippin most was her mother's struggle for breath.

She put her hands on her father's arm.

"She can't swallow! I saw her try to drink."

"Only a slight difficulty. Nothing new."

"But the way she's breathing."

"I think that will pass."

But that night Kevin called. Pippin opened the door for him. He noticed at once that her face was excessively pale.

"She is no worse?"

"Yes."

They came to the door of Chickie's room and paused. Chickie appeared sleeping.

Pippin moved from the door. She crept down the hall and around the turn. She turned her face against the wall. Her heart turned to water and she wept.

Kevin put an arm about her. He leaned down.

"You are not giving up, Pippin?"

"She is dying!"

"Not at all."

"But all day she breathed like that!"

Days passed and nights of anguish. Pippin wandered about the house like a pale, lost ghost. She couldn' look in her father's face.

He said: "Please go to bed. Take this and get some sleep?"

It was noon. Pippin awakened with a wildly shaken heart. She had slept since two o'clock in the morning.

There came a faint knocking.

She heard her father say: "Pippin."

She crept over. Her hands fumbled on the knob so David opened it.

CHICKIE IS BETTER

"I just wanted to tell you," he said, standing there with the joy trembling on his face. "She is better—really better."

Chickie's face was almost transparent but she opened the deep, beautiful eyes and looked at Pippin. She said faintly, all the frightened apprehension [illegible]:

"I feel better."

The quarantine was lifted. She could go out now and stand in the Presidio; watch the ships sail out to a blue, misted sea.

Chickie looked at her daughter, an odd, sad happiness in her eyes.

"You are pale, Pippin."

"Oh—but so glad, mother. You can never know how much you mean!"

"I can move my fingers—see!"

And Pippin said to her father: "Does it mean—" but could not finish the sentence.

He stooped down and smiled, but his eyes filled: "I think it [illegible]."

"She will walk? She will be all right?"

"Oh, I am sure!"

Pippin met Kevin as she went down the stairs. Because her joy was great, she put out her hands and said, happily weeping:

"David says—"

"I know—"

He swept an arm about her and said, pleading, "I'm so glad—oh, sweetheart!"

She stood a moment quiet, her heart splitting. Then she moved from him, a dark, wild reproach in her eyes.

Given in Marriage

—By Adele Garrison—

With His Pet Scheme Blasted, Philip Veritzen Changes His Attitude Toward the Young Lovers

CHAPTER 33

"LILLIAN!"

Horror—if not real, the most perfectly simulated emotion I ever had heard—was in Philip Veritzen's voice, as he answered Lillian's equally impassioned appeal. "Don't tell me you can't see what that would mean to Mary!"

"You—you can't think that I would deliberately plan that for any young girl, do you?" he asked impassionately.

Lillian looked at him steadily.

"I knew you wouldn't do it intentionally, my dear," she said simply.

He took down her hand from his shoulder and put it to his lips.

"Thank you, my dear," he said tensely, and as Lillian took his hand firmly between her own and looked at him with kindly belief irradiating her face, I felt ashamed of the grim little cynicism that whispered to me an ugly comment upon the great producer's protestation.

VERITZEN TOO THEATRICAL

He was too good to be true, I told myself, too theatrical, altogether, to be wholly sincere. I saw that Lillian apparently believed him. Usually, I rely on Lillian's judgment and insight, and take her conclusions in preference to my own; but in this instance I could not help the conviction that Lillian's judgment was being warped by the remembrance of Phil's magnificent, generous gesture when Marion, her idolized child, was in the hands of the kidnapers.

As simply as if he were offering a bon-bon to a child, he had told Lillian that his whole fortune was at her command if needed to rescue her daughter, and that there would never be any question of repayment between them.

It was utterly impossible for me, however, to voice such a doubt in the face of Lillian's expressed belief. I must follow her lead, secure whatever advantage I could for Mary and Noel, and bide my time for finding out whether any ulterior motive lay beneath the great producer's profession of good faith.

He was speaking again now, and I set myself to listen, marveling at the sudden calmness of his words and manner. Either he was seething inside, masking his emotions beneath magnificent histrionism, or he had suddenly shifted his plans, whether because of Lillian's appeal or for reasons of his own.

"Then, as I understand it," he said slowly, "the situation is this. Noel and Mary have asked and received your permission to marry immediately."

He looked at me as if for confirmation, and I nodded my head.

"Where are Noel and Mary?" he asked abruptly.

"I think they are down in Mrs. Underwood's apartment," I said.

"Will it be possible to call them over here?"

"Yes; we can have them here in two minutes. Lillian, will you phone them, please."

Lillian walked to the telephone, while I fairly held my breath in wondering speculation as to what course Philip Veritzen meant to pursue. But I was not long left in doubt. He rose as Noel and his lovely fiancee entered the room, looking exactly like two frightened pupils sent to a principal's office for an infraction of school regulations, and going over to them, put one hand with apparent affection on Noel's shoulder and held the other out to Mary.

"You ridiculous children," he said fondly. "What is all this I hear about your trying to defy the ogre by jumping into matrimony?"

The dazed look on both young faces would have been ludicrous if it had not held such real pathos. Noel started to speak, but his father held up a commanding hand.

ANOTHER VERITZEN TEST

"Just a minute," he said. "Mrs. Graham has told me that you are so terrified at the thought of being separated from Mary for a year that you have asked permission to marry, and that she has given it to you. May I ask what your plans are after marriage? It really seems as if I might be entitled to know them."

The smile that he gave his son was a brilliant, kindly one, and I saw the boy gulp in sudden relief.

"I fear we haven't any definite plans, sir," he said. "We wanted to wait until we had an opportunity to talk to you and find out if you really were set upon Mary's going over so soon. If she could wait a few months until that operetta was out of the way and my lecture engagements—those you got me—were filled, then I could go with her, and it would be perfectly marvelous for both of us."

He stopped and looked at his father with such unconscious pleading in his eyes that I wondered how any father could be impervious to it. There was no appeal in Mary's eyes, however. She looked with clear appraisal at the man who held her destiny and that of the man she loved in his hands.

"Suppose," said Philip Veritzen slowly, "that I say I cannot wait—that she must go now."

DINNER IN THIRTY MINUTES IS NOT MAGIC -:- FOUR-WAY SUMMER SUIT

Good Menus Served at No Notice

By Martha Lee

From Martha Lee's Wednesday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

Do you feel like the man pulling the rabbit out of the hat when you find it necessary to produce a dinner in thirty minutes? Some sort of magic is necessary, isn't it? But it is a very practical sort of magic, as we realize when we find ourselves in this position. A little planning and a well-stocked cupboard will overcome all fears. Canned meat and vegetables can be turned in a moment's notice into attractive dishes to serve, and just at present, native greens are appearing on the markets to add variety and color. Also pineapple, rhubarb and strawberries are all at the very height of their season just now. These can very easily be worked into tasty desserts, or what is better than serving the fresh fruit as it is?

Fish Fillets with Cheese Sauce
New Potatoes
Buttered Beets
Tossed Vegetable Salad
Fresh Strawberries and Cream
Cookies
Coffee

Heat the oven to 500 deg. F. Dip the fish in milk and then in bread crumbs and arrange it on shallow baking pan. Pour a few tablespoons of melted butter over this and the main dish of the meal is ready to be back in a hot oven for 6 to 10 minutes. In the meantime boil the potatoes, make the cheese sauce and heat the beets, which are of the canned variety. The greens are all cleaned and stored in the refrigerator, the French dressing is made and it is only a matter of a moment to cut the salad ingredients, arrange in a bowl and toss together with the French dressing. The strawberries are cleaned, sugar has been added and they are ready to serve for dessert. Lastly make the coffee.

Sausage with Glazed Apple Rings
Parsley Potatoes
Carrot and Peanut Salad
Muffins
Stewed Rhubarb
Waffers
Coffee

First turn on the oven to 400 degrees F. and mix up the muffins, which may be made from a prepared mixture. Parboil the sausage for five minutes and then fry until coked and brown. Boil the potatoes. Make the apple rings by cooking ½-inch slices of a cored apple in a syrup made of one cup of sugar and ½ cup of water. Chop the carrots and peanuts quite fine and mix with French dressing. Arrange on lettuce. The rhubarb will be made ahead of time.

Lamb Chops
Broiled Pineapple
Sweet Potatoes
Tomatoes
Bacon
Hot Rolls
Raspberry Whip with Custard Sauce

Turn on the oven to 500 degrees F. Place the chops in a row in a greased broiler, then a row of sweet potatoes (canned) with a slice of bacon around each, tomatoes cut in half and covered with seasoned buttered crumbs and a row of pineapple rings, sprinkled slightly with sugar. Place the broiler pan a few inches from the flame and cook for about 20 minutes, turn chops once. Season, place on a platter and serve. In the meantime mix up the rolls and bake in the oven while the meat is broiling.

Raspberry Whip can be quickly made by adding one cup of raspberry pulp to two beaten egg whites and about one tablespoon sugar and one teaspoon of lemon juice. Beat until light and fluffy, arrange in sherbet glasses and leave in the refrigerator until ready to use. Make a custard sauce of the egg yolks.

TOMORROW'S MENU

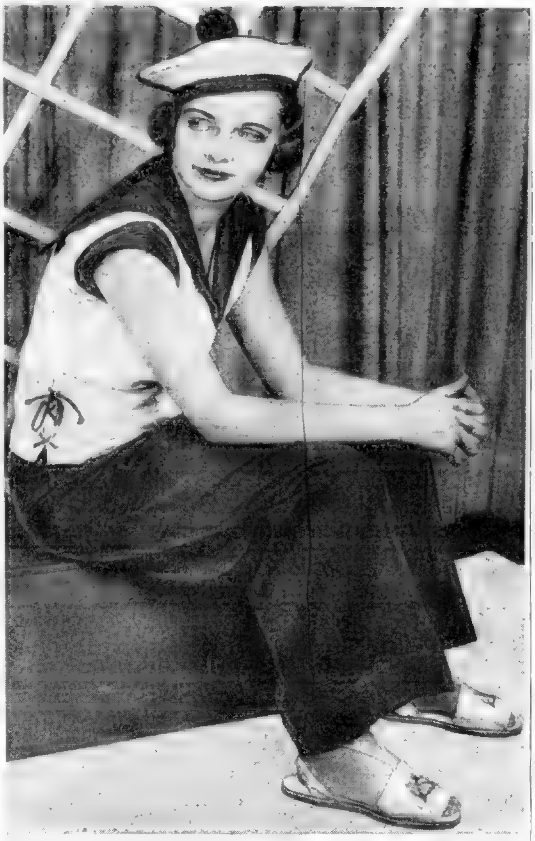
Oriental Garden Is Symbolic

NO GARDEN in the world is perhaps as lovely as the Japanese, where each individual object and each particular grouping has its own spiritual symbolism and significance. We probably shall never achieve anything approaching his studied and classical spiritual quality because in Japan gardening has been an art, not for decades alone, but for centuries.

LATEST FASHIONS



It is going to be the biggest seagoing summer in fashions ever. And why not? The sea is the favorite playground of most New Englanders, and any day we will take a sailorman's word on what makes proper crowder, how long a nor'easter will last or what to wear in, around and to the sea. Miss Jane Bogardus, debutante from Swampscott, models espadrilles, slacks, middy and sailor cap with the genuine salty air. They are all obtainable at a smart Boston shop.

By Annice Brink

THE NAVY and sailormen have fashion in hand as never before. They took spring clothes in an overwhelming tide, and now not only the Annapolis color but the very braid of an ensign's uniform, espadrilles of a Spanish fisherman, cap of a Breton sailor and dungaree pants of the lowliest deck-swabber have joined in keeping the situation well in hand.

Middies, which have long been rolled in ignominious bundles by girls who felt they were exceedingly old-fashioned gym equipment will flaunt their crisp lines and dazzling whiteness as a part of the veriest sophisticate's sports equipment.

Miss Jane Bogardus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederic B. Bogardus, being the sports-loving girl that she is, wears a comfortable, practical, yet terribly smart and up-to-the-moment sailor ensemble with gusto and the sense of "belonging." The slacks are navy gabardine, cut with a flap in front, wide legs, and a high, pointed back that allows such leeway for arm and body action without a tuck-in sweater or blouse creeping out. The middy is white and blue, a smart length, and it has lacings that banish bagginess, a fault of most middies.

The red, white and blue French sailor hat is one of those things that either looks marvelous on, or quite the opposite. If you are the fortunate who can wear it, waste no time for its chic is unsurpassable.

The espadrilles have comfortable, hand-woven straw soles that simply love having sea-water sloshed into them, and they are banded with printed linen.

The ensemble is from a Boston shop. For further information, phone Annice Brink, Liberty 4000, or write her at the Boston Evening American, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Pandora Tells You

DEAR PANDORA:

My husband smokes cigars. Now, before the depression I used to rather enjoy the plutocratic fragrance of a two-bit perfecto, but in these latter lean years he can't afford—or I see that he doesn't—to buy them. In their place and all over the place he now smokes those stogies that are sold by the handful for ten cents. I believe they are guaranteed against damage by fire, or something of the sort, for although the use of several large matches causes them to give off thick clouds of rubber-scented smoke, their greatest use seems to be as an exercise for the jaws. They're always going out and he chews them. In the brief period that he is able to keep them burning they succeed in slightly smudging the ceiling and discoloring all my nice dimity drapes. And lately he's gotten so frugal that he won't throw one of the things away if it's more than two inches long. He just puts them on the mantelpiece, in an ash tray, or even behind a picture to save for a rainy day. Really the house is cluttered up with them like dandelions on the lawn. The situation is actually smudging by life. Last week our small Scotty ate one and has had a burr in his bark ever since. I'm scared to death for the baby's health. Please advise me . . . I'm at the end of my rope. What shall I do? EUNICE.

DEAR EUNICE.

If you're at the end of your rope, think of your husband. He's at the end of his and ought to throw them all away and buy some new ones. He probably doesn't enjoy chewing those cheap torches any more than you like the general smoke-screen effect. If the horrid smell bothers you, why save a scent just to be miserable? Your risking the health of your own husband and the rest of your family for the sake of false economy. Make him buy better smokes . . . or even try him on cigarettes. He needn't be extravagant . . . merely fumigated. PANDORA.

Heart Disease Increases in Nation

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D

Endocarditis is really a form of heart disease. It is a type that demands expert medical attention. I am speaking of it today because a recent report shows a marked increase in the number of cases of heart disease and particularly of endocarditis.

Endocarditis, as its name implies, is an inflammation of the endocardium, the inner, delicate lining of the heart. This membrane becomes inflamed as a result of the presence of poisonous agents that circulate in the blood stream and reach the heart.

Many different germs are capable of causing endocarditis. The most dangerous are the "streptococci." These germs set up a serious and sometimes fatal inflammation of the heart. Cases that recover may be permanently damaged by scar formation in the endocardium or lining of the heart. This is most apt to involve the valves of the heart and is likely to result in a permanent heart murmur.

Murmurs, or the noise of the "leaks," as they are frequently called, are abnormal sounds from the heart caused by the inadequate closing and opening of the valves of that organ. As a result of this valvular imperfection, the heart is unable properly to perform its work. When undue strain or fatigue is placed upon a damaged heart it is unable to "carry on."

In what I have said, I do not mean to imply that all heart murmurs are serious and indicate a fatal outcome. Many valvular disturbances are mild in their nature and do not prevent the heart from performing its work without signs of fatigue. Then there is what is spoken of as a "compensated heart" and its possession need cause no alarm, providing adequate precautions are taken.

Then again, there is the so-called "functional murmur," so commonly seen in young children. As a rule, this type of murmur eventually disappears without damage to the heart. It must be distinguished from the more serious form of heart murmur.

Endocarditis often follows acute rheumatic fever, chorea, tonsilitis and other infectious diseases. It may occur as a complication of penumoina, grippe, influenza and other respiratory infections. It is not a pleasant complication and every precaution must be taken to guard against this disorder.

Tense Moment at Dance

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

The other evening my friend and I went to a dance and one time when I came from the dressing room I found my friend dancing with another girl whom I know very well. I waited for them to finish the dance and this made me feel cheap. Please tell me whether this was correct on his part, and also what I should have done in this case. M.

I don't blame you for feeling that this was an awkward situation to find yourself in, and it distinctly wasn't mannerly for your partner to place you in this situation. He should, of course, have waited for you to rejoin him.

There wasn't anything that you could have done about this . . . there usually isn't much that we can do when the other person is so thoughtless. The well-bred person, in the face of ill-breeding, is as gracious as possible, doing nothing, saying nothing, waiting for the awkward moment and occasion to pass. And the silence should not be a frigid one, a pouty one, but one that achieves a pleasant manner even though there may be a great ache inside!

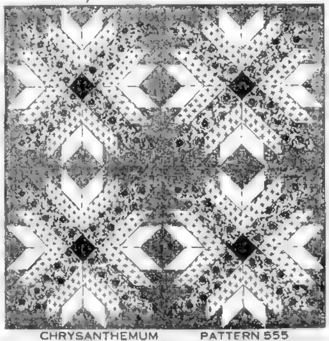
A Chrysanthemum Pattern



CHRYSANTHEMUM PATTERN 555

Topping the list of favorites among quilts is the choice Chrysanthemum pattern. Why its favoritism? The illustration shows a number of reasons. Its beauty—its truthful representation of the flower—its simple structure; it is easy to cut because most of the patches are in strips so all you do is cut the material this way and snip off the patches and that does simplify the work. The patches are easily joined, too, so what more could a quiltmaker ask?

Pattern 555 comes to you with complete, simple instructions for cutting, sewing and finishing.

Efficiency Age Produces Seersucker Suit That Can Be Whole Wardrobe

By Dorothy Roe

THE EFFICIENCY AGE shows up in summer suits which, worn in their various combinations, make up four separate costumes.

For the poor working girl or the hurried debutante the four-way suit is a sound investment, offering practically a complete wardrobe in one costume.

One of the newest variations of the four-way theme is a linen and seersucker combination consisting of two-piece dress of plaid or striped seersucker in gay colors, with linen skirt and topcoat in either white, natural or navy.

Costume No. 1—Seersucker and linen topcoat.

Costume No. 3—Seersucker dress without coat.

Costume No. 4—Linen skirt and seersucker blouse without coat.

Of course if you care to invest in a few extra blouses and sweaters for wear with either the linen or the seersucker skirt, the variations are limitless.

The costume is particularly effective in a seersucker plaid of red, blue and yellow with navy linen skirt and coat.

The idea also is worked out in pastel silk [illegible] combined with checked woolen topcoat and skirt.

The solid color linen dress with pastel checked woolen skirt and coat also is popular.

Exit Cards Are Vital Factors to Defense at Contract

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

Establishing Communications

A VITAL factor to the defense in a majority of hands at Contract Bridge is the establishment of a line of communication between the defending hands. Equally, it is one of the responsibilities of the Delarer to prevent, if possible, ready exits and entries from one defending hand to the other. Every good bridge player watches with care his cards of exit and seeks in certain situations, even by unusual means, to create cards of entry for his partner so that a desired lead may be made and thus possibly defeat what may appear to be an impregnable contract.

The North player in the hand below was faced with what was obviously a very difficult problem in attempting to put his partner in the lead so that West's contract of four spades might be defeated. The method by which he found the solution to this problem is interesting indeed.

West, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.

	♠ K 5 4 ♡ A ◇ K Q 8 4 ♣ Q 10 8 4 2
♠ A J 10 9 8 ♡ K J 10 7 ◇ A 9 7 ♣ J	North West East South	♠ Q 7 3 2 ♡ Q 9 6 2 ◇ 6 5 ♣ A K 7
	♠ 6 ♡ 8 5 4 3 ◇ J 10 3 2 ♣ 9 6 5 3

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ♣	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding was simple enough. West was quite correct in refusing to show his heart suit after his partner's Double Raise of the spades, although it is possible that had he bid four hearts over three spades the play of the hand would have assumed a different course.

North's opening lead was the Ace of hearts, and when the Dummy went down on the table it was apparent to him that if the contract was to be defeated unusual means must be taken, as obviously the only tricks in sight for the North and South players were all in the North hand. They were the Ace of hearts, a diamond trick and the spade King. The only hope, as North viewed the situation, of securing another trick was to be able to ruff a heart. To do this it was essential that South be put in the lead at least once, and the Dummy disclosed that the only chance of doing this was through the diamond suit. The Ace-King of clubs were apparently an insuperable barrier to any club entry in the South hand when coupled with North's holding in that suit. The chance then of defeating the contract rested upon South holding both the Knave and Ten of diamonds, and North, after reasoning this out, boldly led a small diamond from his four-card suit headed by the King-Queen.

As [illegible] diamond was played from Dummy, South played the Ten, and West, seeing that the hold-up would be futile, took the trick with the Ace and now laid down the Ace of trumps, hoping to find that the adversely held trumps would break 2-2 in which case the hand could still be made. It was, as West feared, a vain hope, as North won the second trump trick with the King, and South discarded. Continuing his plan of campaign, North now led his remaining small diamond, which South won with the Knave and returned a heart, giving to his partner the ruff which defeated the contract.

It is easy to see that North adopted the only method of defeating the contract against sound play by the Declarer. Had he chosen instead the lead of either the King or Queen of diamonds, West would have refused to win the first trick and would thereby have been enabled to effectually shut out North's hope of a ruff.

Against the line of defense adopted by North, West was helpless. Some persons might say that this play is spectacular and based upon knowledge of the location of the cards. As a matter of fact, this is not the case. North has but this one chance, slender though it is, of defeating the contract—that is, to find his partner with the two vital cards in the diamond suit. West, on the bidding, is quite clearly marked with the diamond Ace.

There was a little scare in the neighborhood a few days ago. Elmer Close went down to Mrs. Kennedy's house to see if she needed any help, and couldn't find her anywhere. Red Sox Finally Catch Up With Lary; Lucky Lady Sloane ↕ Joe Jacobs Gets Spanish Hot Foot As an Added Memory

By AUSTEN LAKE

Austen Lake

LYNFORD LARY is a shortstop whom the Yankees had mislaid among its clutter of infield players and forgotten about until Manager Joe McCarthy began to take inventory the other day to meet the league's player limit. Joe just went up and down the line, counting noses, and when he came to Lary he looked hard and long for a while and finally clucked his tongue in vexation.

"Well, my little man," said he, "And who might you be?"

Lary told him, and a great glow crossed Joe's broad face. "Well kick my shins from ear to ear," he snorted, "Where have you been?"

So Lary explained that the Yankees had been shoulder deep in shortstops and he had been bogged down and every time he would work up to the surface the club would buy another layer of shortstops and he would be mired all over again.

"Well, get along now," said Joe, clapping the lad on the buttocks. "The Red Sox bought you last summer, only I couldn't find you and had to send up Bill Werber."

Collins Plugs Leak in His Infield

FACT IS that Eddie Collins, in his new policy to buy only ready-to-wear players and pay spot cash, did bid on Lary last year and finally got Werber instead with the promise that if the Yankees ever did anything about Lary later on they would let the Red Sox make another offer.

Lary is a stylish youth, the next thing to a brow, who used to be a male typist and stenographer by trade and held several medals for clicking about the quick red fox jumping over the lazy brown dog against time. When he reported to the Yankees in 1927, as part of a $120,000 deferred payment deal which also included Jimmy Reese, he brought an armful of books, a set of golf sticks, and some pigskin luggage with gold mountings.

The Yankees were fixing to reshuffle their infield and had detected a flaw in Mark Koenig's eyesight. Lary did not ask where shortstop was but went out and played the position with lots of fancy flourish. Only in time, McCarthy, who is a testy man and easily offended, got sore at Lary and yanked him out of there for a comparative stranger named Crosetti. Maybe Lynford stayed out late or wouldn't eat his oatmeal.

WELL, THIS SPRING the Red Sox had a Jack Spratt and wife problem on the left side of their infield, where Billy Werber could hit and not field and Bucky Walters could field and not hit, and Billy was kicking away the runs that Bucky did not knock in. So they sent down a hurry call to ask if the Yankees would not reach something down off their shelf stock to fit the need. And they sent up Lary, who was just hanging around gathering dust and getting no younger every day.

The funny thing is that the little pee-wee infielder, "Rabbit" Warstler, whom the Sox had sent along to the Athletics last winter as a kind of package filling to keep the Grove-Walberg-Bishop matter from rattling, is one that the club wishes they had back again. Because Warstler has fitted into Connie Mack's new deal and experienced a rebirth in the field and at bat so that the Philadelphia newsmen are calling him the "demon midget" and pouring him over with fancy verbiage.

Lucky Lady of the Horse Race Business

LUCKY LADY of the horse tracks is Mrs. Isabelle Sloane, owner of the Brookmeade stud, who is planning to send part of her stable to the Rockingham track next month. In the Saratoga yearling market last year she picked up Time Clock for $700, High Quest for $3500 and Cavalcade for $1200, a total outlay of $4500.

Since then Cavalcade has been the sensational gleaner, or money horse of the season, adding a total of $35,627 to the $15,750 won last year. High Quest, which won $15,025 last year, has picked up an additional $29,165 in the Wood Memorial and Preakness this season. And when Time Clock won the Florida Derby revival at Hialeah, he boosted his earnings to $11,275.

But don't draw your life savings and go rushing up to Saratoga next August to smack down on some sleek nag in the hope of tapping a gold mine. Because there have been hundreds of duds sold under the Saratoga hammer. Like New Broom, which went for $65,000 and never won a thin dime until last winter, when it was made over into a polo pony and used around Miami.

Then there was Broadway Limited, which was bought in for $50,000 by Charles Waggoner, and likewise failed to pay a cent in winnings. Only Waggoner, wisely, had insured the horse for its full value, and one day, during a red hot workout, it fell dead in its tracks and paid the full purchase amount.

Yussel Gets Into Trouble Again

JOE JACOBS, manager of Max Schmeling, or "Yusel the Muscle" as he is known to the boxing trade, has just fallen foul of an old Spanish custom. Joe was arrested in Barcelona for failure to pay a $2000 government tax on his purse after the bout with Paulino Uzcudun.

This is only one more adventure in the goofy career of Yussel as a fight manager. It was he who pulled the fatal mistake of taking Mike McTigue, then light heavyweight champion, to Columbus, Ga., in 1932 to fight Willie Stribling, a native of those parts.

And the natural upshot was, though Mike won the match and was declared the winner by Referee Harry Ertle, certain parties with long whiskers and big, black horse pistols climbed into the ring and flourished their artillery under Ertle's nose, causing him to cackle a reversal of decision as he leaped through the ropes and lit out cross-country.

It was almost as daffy a bit of judgment on Yussel's part as that which prompted Battling Siki, the Senegalese Negro, to risk his title against McTigue, a native Irishman, in Dublin on St. Patrick's Day in 1923, a few months previous to the Georgia encounter. Only Jacobs was not Mike's manager then and did not get credit for the coup.

And it was Jacobs who rushed to the microphone when Jack Sharkey was awarded the decision over Max Schmeling in the world's heavyweight title bout in 1931 and screamed, "We was robbed" over a national network that reached 20,000,000 people.

INFIELD SHIFT PLANNED BY RED SOX

By Bill Grimes

Cleveland, O., May 16.—Now that [illegible] Lefty Grove is ready to take his turn on the hilltop and Lyn Lary has joined them, the Red Sox are in a very jovial frame of mind as they speed along toward St. Louis, the first stop on the whirl around the western circuit.

Since the first of the season the Red Sox infield has kicked away many ball games. In fact, if Manager Bucky Harris had had a capable shortstop there is no question that the Sox would now be sailing along in first or second place. But unfortunately, they are down in the second division with less than a .500 average.

The Sox have shown plenty of offensive power this year. There is a punch practically all the way down through the lineup.

Lary has never been a strong hitter but defensively he is one of the best shortstops in the league. The Sox have enough hitting strength to be able to carry him and Manager Harris is firmly convinced that his newcomer will be a valuable asset to his club. Lary is a hustling ball player. Moreover he is a team player, and his spirit will be beneficial to the Red Sox.

WALTERS BENCHED

The acquisition of Lary will cause another shift in the Sox lineup. Bill Werber will be moved over to third and Bucky Walters will be benched.

Werber was a third sacker during his school and college days, and if he can overcome that unconscious fault of taking his eye off ground balls, he should be able to make the grade at his new berth.

The return of Grove is the best break the Sox have experienced this season. With Lefty in shape, Harris is now in a position where he can—and will—demand better pitching from some of his highly touted stars. There has been too much letting down on the part of Sox twirlers whenever an "out," such as a boot or two, cropped up. From now on they will bear down or move on.

Harris announced this morning that Fritz Ostermueller will pitch the opening game in St. Louis tomorrow afternoon. Ostermueller has made a very favorable impression with the Red Sox manager. The former Rochester southpaw has shown a barrel of intestinal fortitude. He never lets up and will fire 'em at opposing batters at top speed under any and all conditions.

Harris has been around baseball long enough to realize that a youngster like Ostermueller is going to make many mistakes and lose his share of ball games but he believes the rookie is a fine prospect.

PITCHERS ON SHELF

Lem Solters is expected to return to the lineup tomorrow. He has been out with an attack of lumbago but reports today that he is ready for service. Although Dusty Cooke is a great all around ball player, the Sox have missed Solters' hitting.

Two of the many Red Sox left handers, Rube Walberg and Bob Weiland, did not go West with the club. Weiland has been at his home in Chicago and is due to report tonight in St. Louis, but Walberg will not join the team until his finger, which became infected recently, is right and he is all set for action.

"What's the trouble now? Tip of your nose itchy? That means you're in for a fight. Here it is, pally. Sneeze for the customers—they love it. What? Aw forget it. This is just fun."

"Ah, good sir, I dub thee a worthy ex-king. Well, you were the best until I came along, if I do say it. Don't mind this. That throne can't carry double, so you've got to get off. Soft landings, old dear. Come back an' see me sometime!" (Pictures by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

Warriors to Open With Cards Here; Urbanski Stars

By Joe Cashman

Whoever of the Braves' official family was responsible for the salary increase awarded Billy Urbanski this season is certainly entitled to pat himself on the back.

Making Barber Bill a contented athlete also made him the class of the National League shortstops, just as allowing him to [illegible] year [illegible] he [illegible]

The Tribe's [illegible] was [illegible] a $1000 raise [illegible] his '34 [illegible]. Never [illegible] paid higher dividends.

An hour after the document arrived at the Urbanski tonsorial parlors at Perth Amboy, N. J., it was [illegible] back to Tribe headquarters with the signature duly affixed.

And within a few days Billy, accompanied by his wife and two youngsters, was on his way to the sunny surroundings of St. Petersburg to spend part of the unexpected pay boost on a vacation from shaves and haircuts.

HITTING FOR .320

When the rest of the Warriors reported for spring training at St. Pete they found their shortfielder almost in shape to start the season. He had been working out daily for weeks.

He was the club's standout performer in those early sessions, and he still is. He opened the race with a bang and has steadily advanced in all-around efficiency ever since.

Today finds him a .320 hitter, the most successful lead off man in the circuit and the most brilliant of the loop's fielders in the most difficult of base hall.

No rival shortstop compares with him in any department of play except "Arky" Vaughan of the Pirates, who hits slightly better but is a minor leaguer on defense compared with the diminutive tribesman.

The Braves' management went to great lengths in an effort to get Dick Bartell of the Phils last winter. Now an offer of Bartell along with any other Quaker you could name in exchange for Urbanski would be laughed at by Bill McKechnie. In fact, your envoy happens to know that our shortfielder is not for sale.

How different was the situation a year ago this time.

He was more than two weeks late in reporting at camp. Though still unsigned, he was told he would be expected to play in the opening exhibition game against the Yankees two days later.

DULL AT TEPEE

Reluctant to make a clown of himself in competition, he tried to get in playing shape in 48 hours. When the Yankees came, he couldn't throw to second base.

[illegible] raged over the condition of his wing and downhearted because he had been given the alternative of accepting original terms or going home, the race was half over before he really got started. He finished up hitting only .250 and with a most ordinary fielding record.

If a $1000 raise could bring about as much improvement in every Warrior as it has in Urbanski, Judge Fuchs could buy a pennant very cheaply.

Barber Bill and his mates arrived home this morning from their first trip through the West.

They weren't scheduled to get in until this evening, but for the second successive afternoon rain halted a meeting with the Pirates in Pittsburgh and permitted them to get away from Smoky Town 10 hours early.

So, weather permitting, they will drill at the Wigwam this afternoon in preparation for the game with the St. Louis Cardinals tomorrow, the opening of their first long home stay of the season.

The showing of the McKechniemen in the wide open spaces was most encouraging. They won six out of 11 games from the western enemies, which is a pennant-contending pace in any league any year.

They left home three games back of the top, then occupied by the Giants. They return just 1½ games back of the world champion New Yorkers and but 3½ games in the rear of the pace-setting Pirates.

Yes, sir, they're sitting pretty.

HUSTED-HUNT IN COLLEGE NET FINAL

By Walter Kiley

Robert Husted of Dartmouth and Robert Hunt of M. I. T. earned their way into the finals of the New England Intercollegiate tennis championship being played at the Longwood Cricket Club with stirring semi-final victories today.

Husted, defending champion and top seeded player, defeated Bill Owen, captain of Amherst, 6—1, 6—1, in the upper half of the bracket. Hunt, seeded No. 2, won a long drawn-out battle over Paul Guibord of Dartmouth, 10—8, 6—4.

In the doubles this afternoon, Guibord and Husted, both of Dartmouth, seeded No. 1, meet Frank Parks and Ed Hughes, unseeded team from Springfield University.

The latter pair pulled out a surprising and unexpected semifinal victory over Bob Kelleher and C. C. Jones of Williams who were seeded No. 2, 6—4, 6—0, 6—0.

Owen was much better in his match with Husted than the score would indicate. The wind, which reached high proportions continually, carried Owen's drives out of the baseline, but Husted, who was employing a fine back hand, never allowed Owen to get up to the net. He applied the pressure when needed the most.

Guibord, interscholastic tennis champion at Melrose high, forced Hunt to the longest match during the course of the tourney. Hunt was runnerup to Frankie Parker in the indoor junior nationals at New York last winter and played a remarkable all around game to pull out the three-set verdict.

2 Mexican Battlers Leave for U. S.

Mexico City, May 16 (INS)—Rodolfo Casanova, Mexican bantamweight champion and generally recognized also as holder of the Mexican featherweight title, will leave Mexico City for the United States tomorrow for a fight with Freddie Miller in Los Angeles May 29.

He will be accompanied by Promoter Jimmy Fitten and Kid Azteca, Mexican welterweight champion, who is scheduled to battle young Peter Jackson on June 5, also in the California City.

Scratch Blazonry from Epsom Derby

London, May 16 (AP)—Lord Howard de Walden's colt Blazonry today was scratched from the entry list for the Epsom Derby to be run June 6, because of failure to complete training following an injury.

The colt was quoted at 40 to 1 in the last callover of betting odds.

Mr. Boston Says:—

Dusek Gets "Hot Foot" Ready to Lick George

$10,000 for Hamas

By JACK CONWAY

ERNIE DUSEK dropped into this office following his training at Jerry Buckley's Gym. And Max Kase gave him a hot foot just to show he wasn't afraid of the Nebraska bad man who will take a shot at Ed Don George's world heavyweight mat title at a Paul Bowser show at the Garden on Friday night.

AND YOU ASK, what is a hot foot? Such ignorance! You apply a hot foot as follows. You first pick your victim, and get Dave Egan or Walter Kiley to hold him in earnest conversation. Then you take a paper match, and squeeze it between the upper part of the sole and the leather of the victim's shoe.

Mr. Boston

Next you light the match, walk away nonchalantly, and wait until the match begins to burn close to the victim's foot. Different victims have various ways of expressing their feelings at a hot foot.

THE HOT foot was introduced to the boxing game by Pete Reilly who formerly managed Jack Delaney, Bat Battalino and Max Schmeling. Pete was always a playful soul, and when not applying a hot foot would amuse himself attaching fireworks to the starting system of your automobile. When you stepped on the self starter, you would start off a Fourth of July display of fireworks.

A CHICAGO gangster collapsed at the wheel of his auto when he was made a victim of this little joke. He thought one of his enemies had opened fire on him with a machine gun.

AFTER THE hot foot ceremonies Dusek informed us he would win Ed Don George's world heavyweight title at the Garden on Friday night.

"I licked George in our last bout only to be robbed of the decision," said Dusek, "and this time even a hostile referee won't be able to deprive me of the title."

I EXPECTED Joe Jacobs, manager of Max Schmeling, to put in an appearance at the mention of the world "robbery." Joe has a copyright on that word.

$10,000 Bid for Hamas

RIP VALENTI tells me he has offered Steve Hamas a guarantee of $10,000 with a 30 per cent privilege to meet Jack Sharkey at New Fenway Park during the coming summer. Charley Harvey, Hamas' manager, has been asking a $25,000 touch for a Sharkey match, but Valenti says that kind of money isn't growing on the bushes any more.

VALENTI'S CLUB, the Goodwin A. C., is staging the 10-round bout between Patsy Perroni and Unknown Winston at the Arena on next Monday night. It is the best card booked this year by a local club and should develop into a punching duel.

PERRONI AND Winston both like to roll their socks down around their ankles in collegiate style and let 'em breeze.

JUST TO BE first: Eleven or 12 huskies who have played football for Northwestern are considering entering Boston University. Where they can get the benefit of Pat Hanley's excellent coaching, and, of course, play a little football. Looks as if football is going to pick up at Boston University.

TOMMY PARLE is betting Paul Bowser a hat that the George-Dusek show hits $22,000. And Bowser is anxious to lose the wager.

NORTHEASTERN BASEBALL LEAGUE OPENS TONIGHT

Mighty Arms Bend, Steel-Taut Sinews Coil to Bombard Blue Invaders

A picture of classic tone is Johnny Dean, giant weight ace of Harvard as he brings his great strength and skill to the peak for the invasion of the Yale track and field warriors on Saturday at the Stadium. Dean is favored to hurl many points into the Crimson total. Note the lines carved on his face by the terrific effort as he coils for a record breaking shotput. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

DEAN IS CERTAIN SHOT, DISCUS WINNER

Eddie Farrell, Harvard's taciturn track mentor, puzzling over ways and means of upsetting Yale's applecart in this annual dual meet between the track and field forces of the Crimson and Eli at the Stadium on Saturday, runs across one name among his entries which erases the wrinkles of worry from his forehead—that of Johnny Dean.

Dean, in this instance, signifies two events of which Farrell is certain, ten points which Harvard is sure to win. A year ago competing in these two events Dean swept through three successive dual meets without a defeat.

This spring he has received only one setback, that by his own teammate Red Healey. But it took a record effort by the Lowell lad to accomplish the feat in the dual meet with Princeton. Since then however Dean has turned the tables by winning both the shot and the discus in the Dartmouth meet last week.

Dean will have only one Yale man the ten points representing a pair of first places but for a pair of records besides. He holds the present Harvard record in the shot put at 48 feet 1½ inches, while Healey's new discus mark is 156 feet 6¾ inches.

Dean will have only one Yale man to beat in each event, Forman, a good 45 footer in the shot, and Bob Lassiter, the Elis' star halfback, in the discus. Lassiter has not been able to get out to the 140 foot mark with the platter as yet. But Yale athletes always put forth their best efforts against Harvard.

The development of Dean from a mere beginner to the finest college shot putter and discuss thrower in the East within two short outdoor seasons has been most unusual. Until last spring he never took part in track.

Then he began toying with the shot under the tutelage of Eddie Farrell. He won his events in the G. B. I. meet and turned in double victories in each of the dual meets with Dartmouth, Princeton and Yale, bettering his performances each week and finishing the season with a pair of Harvard records.

He was slower rounding into form this season, but will be at his peak for Yale.

BOWDOIN AFTER N. E. COLLEGE TRACK TITLE

By Walter Kiley

Johnny Magee and his Bowdoin collegians come down from the fastnesses of Brunswick, Me., definitely committed to lifting the New England intercollegiate track title from Boston College as this annual event is contested at Springfield College on Friday and Saturday.

Bowdoin not only hopes to show the way to Maine and Bates, sister colleges, but to M. I. T., Boston College, Springfield and other competitors as well.

While Magee's strength is much better distributed than in past seasons he has four performers upon whom he pins most of his faith.

50-FOOT SHOTPUTTER

Howard Niblock, former Lynn football and track sensation, is expected to set a New England record in the shotput. Phil Good of South Portland and Charlie Allen in the hurdles and Johnny Adams in the high and broad jumps are other potential winners.

Niblock is improving weekly. He turned in 49½ foot performances in both the dual meet with Boston College and the Penn relays.

In practice he has been bettering 50 feet with consistency, and is due to show the way to the best that the other New England colleges can offer.

He is also entered in the discus throw and while not so proficient in this as in the shot, he will take back water from few as he has a 130-foot mark to his credit against the Eagles.

Bowdoin has been represented by a string of fine hurdlers in recent years. First it was Charlie Stanwood, then it was Ray McLaughlin who cleaned up regularly.

Last season Charlie Allen broke into the timber topping picture and now it is another sensational hurdler, Phil Good, who has shown in Boston several times as a schoolboy winner.

MARVIN IN QUARTER

Vale Marvin, a sophomore who two years ago was captain of the Boston English high track team, looks ready to step a fast 440. He was Regimental champion for a couple of years.

Other Bowdoin contributors should be Johnny Shute in the mile, Dick Grey in the half mile, Elmer Hutchinson in the two mile, all of whom placed against Boston College; Johnny Adams, high and broad jumper, who should win the latter event; Bill Soule, a sophomore who broad jumped 22¼ feet against Boston College; Bob Porter in the high jump, Gardiner Maxey in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, Crowell and Pope in the pole vault.

Class A baseball comes back to New England in gala style with the opening of the Northeastern League set for tonight in three separate New England states.

Down at New Bedford, Jean Dubuc will be host to the Waltham Rosebuds. The latter club is managed by Freddy Maguire, one time Braves second sacker. Included on owner Roger Baker's nine are such old favorites as the Loftus brothers, Sims, Cox, Mahoney and Cosgrove.

Gov. John Winant and Mayor Damase Caron will officiate at opening day ceremonies in the Granite State, when Manchester, with Chief Werra at the helm, entertains Lowell. Playing for the Queen City nine are Al Lupien, former Harvard player and Archie Cochrane, brother of the famed Mickey.

The other league tilt sees Springfield playing at Hartford, Bill Murray has put together a group of hustling youngsters at Springfield who should be the ones to beat for the league pennant.

Walter Hapgood, organizer of the National Association, is general manager of the circuit. The board of directors is composed of Roger Baker, William Morrell and Raymond Werre.

Two classy encounters are carded for the Suburban Twi League tonight. Trum Playground, Somerville, will be the scene of the Arlington Rosebuds and First National Stores game. In the other, St. Peter's is host to West Medford.

The Malden entry in the Boston Twi has been taken over by Roger Baker and will play under the name of the Rosebuds from now on. Bill Barrett, former Red Sox outfielder, has been retained as club manager. One game a week will be played at the Malden Stadium, while on Sundays the nine will hold forth at Wayland.

Jordan Marsh nine makes its first appearance at home tonight when it meets Dick Casey's Neponset club at Dorchester Town Field in the feature of the Boston Park League schedule.

Other games billed find the Upcoes and Maddens playing at Roberts playground, Dorchester, and St Augustines visiting the Hennigans at Jeferson field, Roxbury.

James A. Roche Club nine of Everett entertain the fast Pullman Porters All-colored club this Sunday at Glendale Park.

$10,000 Tag On Lorne Chabot

Syracuse, N. Y., May 16 (INS)—Lorne Chabot, goal tender of the Montreal Canadians, will be sold to the first club that offers $10,000 it was announced today by Leo Dandurand, owner of the club.

It was believed that he will play with the Detroit Red Wings next season, as they think highly of Chabot's ability.

Other top flight games of today sent Revere to Everett, Malden to Chelsea, Winchester to Stoneham, Wakefield to Woburn, Melrose to Winthrop, Lynn Classical to Lawrence in the the North Shore headliner, and Norwood to Waltham.

ROAD WORK ON JIMMY'S CARD

Atlantic City, N. J., May 16 (INS)—Roadwork in the morning and boxing drills in the afternoon was the order of things at the training camp of Jimmy McLarnin today.

Damp weather kept the welterweight champion, who meets Barney Ross in New York May 28, idle most of yesterday.

To newspapermen who descended on the Vancouver boxer's camp his manager, Pop Foster, declared that Jimmy was never in better shape physically.

"He'll knock out Ross, sure," Foster predicted.

Rumors were rife however that McLarnin was worried because of his agreement to make a weight which is two pounds below the welterweight class limit.

Terrier Nine Faces Harvard With Ace Hitter on Bench

Faced with the loss of Fred Garabedian, hard hitting outfielder, Boston University is not conceded too great an opportunity to register an upset by defeating Harvard when the two clash in a return game at the William E. Nickerson Recreation Field, Weston, at 3:30 this afternoon.

Garabedian turned his ankle in the Vermont game last Saturday, and it is still took weak to permit him to play.

George Pattison, who has been playing rightfield, will move over to Garabedian's post in centerfield, and Bill Croke will be shifted from third base to rightfield.

Christie Harris is slated to start at third base.

It is expected that these changes will help the Terriers, although they will not make up for Garabedian's hitting ability.

There will also be two changes in the Harvard lineup.

Ben Prouty, who has been at centerfield all season, has been moved to second base, to replace Fitzpatrick. Ware will start at centerfield.

ROOSEVELT, JR. SEATED NO. 6

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., son of the President, today was definitely placed at No. 6 in the Harvard freshman crew which will race against Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Columbia freshmen on the Charles river Saturday.

Young Roosevelt was stroke of the crew at Groton school last fall and this spring he was placed in that position in Crimson yearling shell.

But Coach Burt Haines shifted him to the No. 6 position to add needed power there. He is 19 years old, 6 feet 4 inches tall, and weighs 180 pounds, and Coach Haines considers him one of the most powerful freshmen sweepswingers.

Duke Bellizzi Is Conscious

New York, May 16 (INS)—The condition of Dominick (Duke) Bellizzi, jockey who was thrown by Psychic Bid at the Jamaica course on Saturday, was slightly improved though still critical today, physicians at the Mary Immaculate Hospital reported. Bellizzi was conscious yesterday for the first time.

Kojar Passes Up Trip to Japan

New York, May 16 (INS)—George Kojac, world's outstanding swimming star, will not compete in a series of exhibitions in Japan this summer, he announced today.

Instead, Kojac, who holds every recognized record in the backstroke from 50 yards to the mile, will train at Andes, N. Y., for the 1936 international matches.

Flour Golf Postponed

Golfers of the Boston Grain and Flour Exchange postponed their opening tournament because of poor weather yesterday. It will be held next Tuesday at Sandy Burr.

Maureen in Politics

Englewood, N. J., May 16 (INS)—Maureen Orcutt, former North-South women's golf champion and present New Jersey title holder, will be a candidate for the Assembly on the regular Democratic ticket from Bergen County.

Miss Orcutt was unopposed in yesterday's primary elections.

"It's a strange feeling to enter a tournament knowing you'll win beforehand," she said when congratulated on her "victory" today.

VETERAN AUTO RACERS SEEK CHANCE IN 500-MILE RACE

$50,000 PURSE ATTRACTS LEADERS

International News Service

Indianapolis, May 16—At least 26 automobile race drivers, from neophytes to veterans, will be "out of luck" when it comes to securing mounts for the 500-mile international sweepstakes to be held here May 30.

With 52 cars entered, 19 of which will be eliminated in the preliminary trials starting next Saturday, May 19, it is obvious that many of the 60 or more eligible race drivers will be riding mechanics or railbirds instead of pilots on the day of the race.

Daily the drivers who have swarmed here from all over the country may be seen dickering [illegible] accept "[illegible]" decent deal" in order to acquire a mou[illegible] classic.

CAR OWNERS DICKERING

Grizzled veterans, with a dozen years of service on the local course bid against youngsters who in the last season or two have registered many impressive triumphs on the secondary tracks of the country. But the car owners, who understand the situation, are taking advantage of it. They are negotiating for the best pilots obtainable under the most advantageous terms.

Louis Schneider, of Indianapolis, who rode to gold and glory as the victor of the 1931 race, was one of the veterans whose hat was reported in the ring for a good, speedy car. Schneider was said to be willing to drive under almost any terms.

Lora L. Corum, who in 1924 was co-winner with Joe Boyer, was another driver of the old school still without a car. Corum started his local racing career in 1922.

The Kansas City veteran, Tony Gulotta, also was on the grounds looking for a backer. Tony, a great favorite during the big events here, was believed on the verge of obtaining a machine.

KREIS UNSEATED

Pete Kreis, the Knoxville, Tenn., speed devil, who has been whirling them around here since 1925, but never had enough luck to win a race, was also still unseated.

Other famous knights of the roaring road still without mounts include Babe Stapp, Zeke Myers, Ira Hall, king of the dirt tracks, Chet Miller and Willard Prentiss.

Convergence of so many of the country's best drivers upon the local speedway was precipitated, it was believed, by the restoration of the $50,000 purse which the first ten finishers of the race will divide.

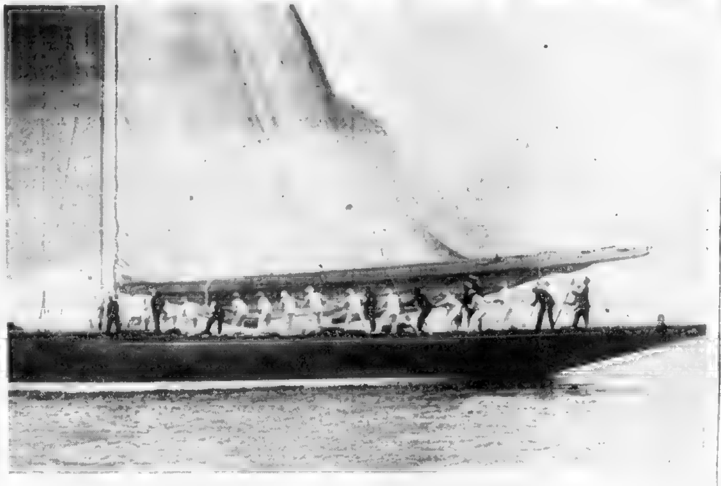
$300 Purse For Leaf, Reds Players

Toronto, Ont., May 16 (INS)—Members of the Toronto Maple Leafs, defeated by the Detroit Red Wings in the national hockey league play-offs, received only $300 each as their share of the gate receipts, it was announced today.

Conny Smythe, manager of the team, said he would not pay $50,000 for Howie Morenz, veteran Canadian centre.

Endeavour Spreads Wings for First Graceful Flight



Like a great white gull sweeping ahead on the gale, the Endeavour steps along on her trial run after the launching in England. The yacht, which will challenge for the America's Cup this summer off Newport, has her owner, T. O. M. Sopwith, and his wife aboard for the test. Members of the crew hoist the huge sails—and the long Cup campaign is on.

KING LEVINSKY DISCOVERED IN HOSPITAL

International News Service

Chicago, May 16—King Levinsky, the ex-fish pedler, today was found at Jackson Park Hospital here.

Lena Levy, sister-manageress of the heavyweight, says it's a "nervous breakdown" that sent him to bed.

Dr. Morey Sherin, attending physician, says that Levinsky is tired out and shows evidence of being over-trained.

But the Kingfish, who fears no man, will take care of one Art Lasky in Los Angeles as soon as he recovers. So Lena vowed today in indignantly denying those reports that her brother had taken a runout on his bout with Lasky in the Pacific Coast city scheduled to have been fought last night. Lena said:

KING SICK BOY

"Sure, we'll fight Lasky out there as soon as the King is fit and himself again. Why, we left his boxing togs in Los Angeles and fully intend to go back there for the fight when the doctor says he is in condition to box. But the King is a sick boy right now and I certainly wasn't going to send him into a bout when he wasn't fit."

The Kingfish, his sister and a brother, Sam Krakow, whizzed into town in the midnight darkness last night and registered surprise to learn they had been the objects of something akin to a manhunt.

Lou Daro and Tom Gallery, who had the bout under their auspices out on the coast, were hoping as late as yesterday that the King and Lena would turn around and return to Los Angeles to fulfill the battle.

DOWN TO 200 POUNDS

Mrs. Levy said it was the weakened condition of Kinfish that caused her sudden decision last Saturday to head for home in Chicago and bring King with her. She said his weight dropped to 200 pounds, six less than his best fighting notch, during the past week.

Chicago, May 16 (INS)—The Illinois athletic commission will uphold the "not less than a year" suspension imposed on Kingfish Levinsky, Chicago heavyweight, by the California boxing board, Chairman Joe Triner said today.

U. S. Consul in Spain Secures Release of Joe Jacobs

Barcelona, Spain, May 16 (AP) United States Consul General Dawson today intervened with Spanish authorities to have Joe Jacobs, American manager of the German heavyweight, Max Schmeling, released from technical arrest for alleged failure to pay taxes.

Jacobs was arrested at the Port Bou border yesterday on information that he had failed to pay $2000 taxes due on Schmeling's share of the receipts from the bout with Paulino Uxcudun Sunday.

Today Jacobs showed a receipt signed by the promoter of the fight, for 5000 pesetas ($685), which Jacobs said he was told would take care of all the taxes.

Jacobs said because of the postponement of the fight when it was first scheduled April 8, Schmeling's expenses had been $12,000 and he had only received $22,500 for the fight.

Baer Has Fear He'll Kill Champ Carnera

By DAVIS J. WALSH
International News Service Sports Editor

New York, May 16 (INS)—Primo Carnera is organically ill. He has a bad heart and an enlarged liver, according to Max Baer, the challenger, who is very sorry about all this and really fears the worst.

"I may kill him," he observed today, thoughtfully, as though somewhat impressed of this possibility. He seemed to feel that it might be unfortunate.

"Carnera," he said, "is worried about something and I think it's me. Beyond that, I know nothing about him except what they tell me. They say he is physically unsound, and that's too bad. It really is. I don't want to walk out there and hit a guy like that. If I have to let go with my Sunday punch, I don't want any invalid in front of me."

These observations were offered by the young man shortly before he started back for Asbury Park, N. J., and the remainder of his training for the June 14 title fight.

DEMPSEY DUE SOON

The remainder of his training, I judge, is to be pretty much like the remainder of a picnic lunch, in fact, somebody else's picnic lunch. You may finish it but the law says you don't have to like it.

However, John Dempsey is coming into town on Saturday and may change all that; John is a nice fellow but old fashioned. He's all for clean living and right thinking on the part of pugilists and is liable to lose self-control at the sight of a punching bag.

Right now, however, Baer has other ideas. He's going to do more than out-fight Carnera. He's even going to out-think him. In other words, this is going to be one of those intellectual fights. Mr. Baer is very intellectual. He reads Will Rogers and everything.

IMITATES LIKE MONKEY

"Carnera's just like a big automaton"—can this be the Tunney influence?—"he's like a monkey. He can imitate but he doesn't know why he's doing it. All he does is make gestures in answer to yours. That's the way he has been taught to fight. They've told him, 'If the other guy does this, you do that,' and he goes ahead blindly and does it. I don't think he figures anything out for himself.

"If he does, let him figure out what to do about a body attack. I'm going after his body and I have reason to believe he won't like that."

TO ERECT 500 NEW STALLS AT SALEM

By Dave Wilson

Applications for stall room at the forthcoming Rockingham Park session have reached such enormous proportions that the New Hampshire Breeders' Association is planning to erect 500 new stalls before the opening on June 23.

To date Racing Secretary Jim Monroe has received applications for 414 more stalls than are available. With the new stalls, Rockingham Park will be able to take care of more than 1400 thoroughbreds.

Rockingham Park has already been assured the best of racing material. C. V. Whitney, most prominent of all owners has made arrangements for shipping 15 head to the Salem course. This string will be handled by Jack Healy, son of Thomas J. Healy, head trainer of the stable.

The powerful stable of Sylvester W. Labrot is another that is slated for these parts. The Labrot horses are handled by Bill Irvine and include such top notchers as Springsteel, Moncl, Khamseen and Stainforth.

Elmer Trueman, who handles a large public stable has applied for 18 stalls. His string includes Star Porter, Ilchester, Corrymeela, Braving Danger and many other stars.

Other stables that have applied for stall room are Sheldon Fairbanks, J[illegible] and George, Mrs. John Hay Whitney, Bonnet Creech, Har[illegible], W. T. Fr[illegible], Admiral Grayson, W. A. Harris, R. H. Heighe, W. Shewbridge, C. C. Smithson, George Philips, Middleburg, W. Ziegler, Jr., Willis Sharpe Kilmer, P. S. Randolph, Just Farm, Jersey Stable, Roy Waldron, J. V. Stewart and Doc Riddle.

Horses will start arriving next Monday and by June 1, more than 500 thoroughbreds are expected to be on the grounds hard at training for the opening day's sport.

Pieton Eager to Defeat McCarron

Karl Pieton of Manchester, N. H., says that he will square accounts with Jimmy McCarron should they meet in the finals of the lightweight class, but Ralph Zannelli, Providence, R. I., flash and Fred Caruso, the hard-hitting Fall River boy, both say they will make it very interesting for both McCarron and Pieton tomorrow night at the Irish American A. A. amateur boxing tournament.

Bill DeMarzio, Norwood high school boy, and Paul Chute, Boston's heavyweight will try to settle their feud. The classes will include 126, 135 and 147 pounds and heavyweights, open, and 160 pounds for novices.

SCHEDULE SIX EVENTS FOR ELI REGATTA

New Haven, Conn., May 16 (INS)—Derby Day, classic colegiate regatta on the Housatonic river, this Saturday will provide six events this year in place of the usual four, the Yale Athletic Association announced last night.

In addition to the varsity race between Yale, Cornell and Princeton, the junior varsity and freshman races between the same institutions and the 150-pound event between Yale, Princeton and Harvard, the authorities have arraged this year for morning races between the Yale and Princeton second varsity 150-pound crews and the Yale and Prnicetion 150-pound freshmen crews.

The freshman 150-pound event will be the first of its kind ever held between crews of the two universities. It will be rowed at 11:30 o'clock and the second varsity 150-pounders will take the water at noon.

By virtue of its recent victories over Columbia and Penn, Princeton remained Yale's most formidable rival today with dopesters predicting a fast, close contest.

Wilson Picks Four Winners

Chalk up another banner day for Dave Wilson. Yesterday at Jamaica four of Wilson's top selections were returned winners. Pending was the choice tidbit paying 6-1. The other winners were Our Reigh, 7-5 General A, 3-2, and Moralist, 1-1. John's Birthday and Davoc, his other top selections finished second and third, respectively. Wilson selected 85 winners during the 36 days of spring racing in Maryland. This mark was one of the best shown.

St. Finbar's and Galway hurling teams will meet Sunday at Celtic Park. Galway and Cork junior football teams meet in the curtain-raiser.

Olympic Committee Meets to Discuss Jewish Question

Athens, Greece, May 16 (AP)—Members of the International Olympic committee today were formally welcomed to Greece for the start tomorrow of their important conferences on the 1936 games at Berlin which are entangled in the German political situation.

The committee will draw up the agenda for the 11th Olympiad, to which several sports are seeking inclusion and will consider the question of feminine participation.

The most important question confronting the conference is that of the Nazi attitude toward the Jews.

At the last meeting of the committee in Geneva assurances of non-discrimination against Jewish athletes were received from Germany. Since that time the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States and the American Olympic committee have gone on record as opposed to American participation unless further assurances, and proof that no discrimination is being practiced, are forthcoming.

Preliminaries

Fred Carone, Boston, vs. Farmer Raymond, Kansas.

John Spellman, Boston, vs Jack [illegible], New York.

Pat O'Hara, Atlanta, vs. Harry Lundin, Ithaca, N. Y.

George Saunders, Boston, vs. Ricardo Santo, Spain.

(One fall to win—10 minute time limits.)

First Bout at 8.30
Main Bout at 10

By Ringside

The Gold Secret will be on the short end of 5 to 3 betting as he tries to score his eleventh straight mat victory by defeating Dick Stahl at the Arena tonight.

Stahl has smashed his way out front in the heavyweight division by the sheer power of his attack. He is a big, strong fellow and has not concerned himself a great deal with the rules of the mat game.

The Gold Secret is Stahl's equal physically, and has an expert knowledge of the fine points of the game. The Gold Secret has not been obliged to meet an opponent with Stahl's ability. Tonight's tussle will give a real line on wrestling's latest mystery man.

George Myerson will defend his world's middleweight championship against Jack Foley in the semi final. Myerson is one of the cleverest wrestlers in the world, and feels his skill and speed will enable him to conquer the rugged Foley.

There will be two special bouts. Sasha, the Russian Cossack, will take on Jack Ross, while "Rebel" Bob Russell will mingle with Phil Allen.

Ekky to Carry 132 Pounds if He Starts in "Met"

Equipoise, C. V. Whitney's great handicap star, will be obliged to tote 132 pounds if he is going to start in the Metropolitan Handicap, one mile feature Saturday at Belmont Park.

The weight assigned Equipoise by Handicapper W. S. Vosburgh is two pounds more than that carried by the son of Pennant and Swinging in the Philadelphia Handicap at Havre de Grace and the Dixie Handicap at Pimlico earlier in the season.

Chase Me, regarded as Equipoise's foremost contender, received the next highest impost for the Metropolitan, 123 pounds. High Quest, winner of the Preakness, gets into the event well under 117 pounds.

Other weights are Tick On 122, Faireno 120, Mr. Khayyam 118, Springsteel 118, Okapi 118, Ladysman 118, War Glory 117, Larranaga 116, Kerry Patch 115, Burgoo King 114, Good Advice 114.

Mortimer M. Mahoney sends word that $802,439 was handled in the "iron men" at Pimlico last Saturday, Preakness Day.

BANK DEPOSITS IN MASS. ARE SOARING

Return of Confidence One Factor in the Change in Trend

By HUGH F. BRADSHAW

Massachusetts Savings B[illegible] port a reversa[illegible] deposits. This we[illegible] M. Spencer, w[illegible] dent's Corner of the current issue of the Savings Banker published by the Savings Banks Association of Massachusetts. Mr. Spencer reports that deposits are mounting steadily. In fact there has been an increase every month since last November. The tendency he predicts, will last for some time. The return [illegible] and increased employment have some bearing on [illegible] deposit trend but even more [illegible] are the other factors as [illegible] by the savings bank leader. He [illegible] diverted from investments to savings by relatively high [illegible] dividend-paying shares, and the high prices and low returns of [illegible] edged bonds. Also the uncertain outlook for market and investment operations is heightened by the stock control bill. Looking toward the future Mr. Spencer sees [illegible] tors changing their attitude toward common stock ownership when their availability for collateral loans is curtailed.

Comments: From where we sit this tendency to save instead of investing, seems worthy of praise . . . In the hands of the Savings Bankers such funds are more likely to be put to a maximum use in promoting enterprise once the capital market is thawed out . . . And many of those who never had a right to frequent the market places will find their personal welfare benefited . . . If, as we suppose, they find that the proper place for their money is in the capable hands of experienced bankers.

Notes: As packers find the offerings exceeding demand prices may be inclined to fade . . . We would be extremely careful as to the packing shares we picked up for a while . . . Tape action of the utilities is considered to be good by some observers . . . Public Service, Consolidated Gas, National Power, Foreign Power and American Power are all worthy of buying consideration on dips to around their most recent lows.

While all the individual issues noted here at specific prices are selling at levels which permit at least an even break, if sold now the market in general is somewhat slower. Present indications are more heartening than in some time but, as yet, the base for a rally is not overly remarkable, and we continue of the impression selling on nearby strength is wise. However, in the event prices dawdle around without making the 94-96 level soon the base will look much stronger and we will cancel that recommendation.

Western Union Co. Head Is Against Stringent Code

By Associated Press

Washington, May 16 — R. B. White, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company told NRA [illegible] a public hearing today that his company will not willingly agree to the stringent code the Administration proposed for the communications industry.

"We most strenuously object," said White, "to injecting in the long-established rate arrangement of this country provisions which we know will add unnecessary and increased burdens to telegraph users, will bring no increase in revenue, and seriously injure the telegraph system by driving a large number of users from it entirely."

"in the hope they will produce a situation which will either force a consolidation of the telegraph companies now prohibited by federal law, or for the government to take over the properties from their present owners at the expense of taxpayers."

Meanwhile David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, told the House Interstate Committee he hoped Congress would establish a central commission with full control over communication.

He was testifying on legislation to create a communications commission. The Senate passed a similar bill yesterday.

"We are heartily in accord with the principle of unified federal regulation of the communications industry," Sarnoff said.

"We have always believed in the necessity for effective regulation of communications by a single governmental agency, and we pledge our complete support to the President's views."

"The creation of a single federal regulatory body in this country will mark a most constructive step in the communications history of the United States."

BOSTON STOCKS MOSTLY OFF

Share prices were mostly lower in late trading on the Boston Stock Exchange today. American Telephone slipped back fractionally despite declaration of the regular $2.25 quarterly dividend. New England Telephone advanced a point. Edison Electric was a point higher while Boston Elevated drooped about 2 points.

American Woolen common was a shade lower while the preferred advanced more than a point. Pa[illegible] M[illegible] advanced fractionally. Boston & Maine [illegible] dropped 5 points. Pen[illegible] was down [illegible]. New Haven was steady around its previous closing price.

[illegible] Torrington, Swift & Co., United Fruit and United Shoe were moderately lower. [illegible] National Stores [illegible] Nash Motors advanced moderately.

House Bill Wth 45 P.C. Margin Call Backed by President

By Associated Press

Washington, May 16. Congressional conferees on the Stock Exchange bill were put on notice today that President Roosevelt wants the [illegible] House 45 per cent margin [illegible] and Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction.

The Chief Executive in a letter [illegible] had some [illegible] deposit [illegible] and [illegible]

He [illegible] communicated to the approaching Geneva conference by Norman H. Davis. Whether his views are fresh approach toward strengthening the Geneva meeting remains to be seen.

The President is considering an early message to Congress relating to munitions makers, but the nature of this proposal was carefully guarded at the White House.

The President said he would send to Congress next week his long-awaited message on war debts. There was no indication that new legislation would be proposed either in this or the munitions message.

The House banking committee, heeding a presidential wish, set itself to vote on continuing the temporary deposit insurance plan that protects deposits up to $2500, instead of having the permanent insurance fund take effect July 1.

Silver was up late this afternoon, with Mr. Roosevelt, a coterie of senators and Secretary Morgenthau endeavoring again to agree on what language the prospective bill should contain.

The Senate itself had up the Norris constitutional amendment for abolition of the electoral college. The House was in recess.

House Democratic leaders want to adjourn before June 11, to avert possible House passage of the Connery 30-hour-week and Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bills and the McLeod bank pay off bill.

Petitions have been filed to force votes on these, and unless the required 145 names are obtained by tomorrow evening, there can be no vote before June 11. If they were signed by tomorrow the vote would be on May 28.

ATLAS PLYWOOD ADDS PLANT

Toronto, May 16. The Atlas Plywood Corp., with headquarters in Boston and operating 14 factories in the United States and one in Canada, is establishing an additional plant here, according to the Industrial Commission.

Plywood boxes and barrels, particularly for the chemical trade, food products, radio and refrigerator industries which are centered in Ontario, will be manufactured by the new Toronto unit.

The Atlas Plywood Corp. is foremost in its field in North America, controlling 30 per cent of the plywood box business in the United States and through its Canadian subsidiary, the Atlas Plywood Corp. of Canada, Ltd., 60 per cent of that in the Dominion.

Steel Production Has Further Gain

By Associated Press

New York, May 16—The rate of steel production made a further gain of one point this week to 61 per cent of capacity.

"But the peak of operations is believed to be near and the outlook for coming months is obscure," said Iron Age today.

"Foremost among contributing to waning confidence," asserted the review, "is the belief that current accumulations of material, prompted by recent price advances, will rob the third quarter of tonnage.

"The common apprehension of a sharp drop in mill operations after June 30 is reflected in the uninterrupted fall in scrap prices, which this week declined from $11.92 to $11.67 a ton, or only slightly above the year's low of $11.33 registered on Jan. 2."

The publication added that the evidences of increasing caution on the part of buyers "reflect business prospects in general and the labor outlook in particular."

Regarding the labor situation the review stated that "the rising tide of industrial unrest has not only increased the uncertainty of costs, but, in some cases, has raised doubts as to the possibility of continuing operations."

While noting that specifications from motor car builders are receding in step with their operations the review declared it was encouraging "to note that releases from miscellaneous sources, although not showing further increases, are holding their own."

Cotton Steady in New York Market

New York, May 16 (INS)—The cotton market was barely able to hold its own as the session progressed today, with initial gains of from 1 to 6 points largely pared down.

Contracts were unchanged to up 2 points, with July up 2 at 11.33, October up 1 at 11.40 and December unchanged at 11.59.

Grains Lower in Chicago Trading

Chicago, May 16 (AP)—Influenced by predictions of unsettled weather in drought sections northwest, wheat prices showed downward trend today. New speculative buying lacked volume. Opening at [illegible] off to ⅜ up, July 86-86⅜, wheat later sagged. Corn started unchanged to ⅜ higher, and subsequently reacted.

AM. TELEPHONE TO PAY REGULAR DIVIDEND

Will Distribute 42 Millions Among 680,000 Holders

By Associated Press

New York, May 16—Directors of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company today declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.25 a share on the capital stock. Similar disbursements have been made since 1921.

The dividend is payable July 16 to stock of record June 15. It calls for a distribution of about $42,000,000 among the company's 680,000 shareholders.

Financial quarters had expected the usual payment, although recent gossip in Wall Street circles suggested some uncertainty on maintenance of the $9 annual rate in view of the drive for downward revision of telephone rate schedules in several sections of the country.

Since 1931 the company has drawn rather heavily upon reserves to keep up the $9 payment, but the trend of earnings has been improving since the fall of 1933. Last year the company earned $7.37 a share and in 1932 $7.82 a share.

For the first quarter this year earnings were equivalent to $1.77 a share. With the upturn in earnings the company reported that the Bell System had shown a net increase of 108,000 telephones and an 8 per cent gain in toll and long distance calls, for the three months ended March 30.

This expansion followed a gain of about 85,000 telephones in service during the last four months of 1933. For the entire year 1933 the company had a net loss of 630,000 telephones compared with a net loss of 1,650,000 stations in 1932.

POWER OUTPUT IS ADVANCED

By Associated Press

New York, May 16 — Electric power output in the United States showed an increase last week compared with the previous week. Total production, as reported by the Edison Electric Institute today, amounted to 1,643,433,000 kilowatt hours, compared with 1,632,766,000 kilowatt hours the week before.

The improvement last week over the like week of 1933 was 11.9 per cent, compared with a rise of 13.7 per cent the week before.

Regional gains from 1933 for last week were: New England 9.1 per cent against a rise of 13 per cent the week before. Middle Atlantic 7.7 per cent against 10.2. Central Industrial 15.5 against 16.3, West Central 8.7 against 6.[illegible] Southern states 7.6 against 11.5. Rocky Mountain 25.5 against 26.8, Pacific Coast 16 against 15.3.

Armour Factions Reach Agreement on Recapitalizing

By Universal Service

Chicago, May 16—Warring factions in Armour & Co. have reached an agreement on a recapitalization plan expected to be acceptable to all classes of stockholders of the huge packing concern, it was learned definitely today.

While the outline of the project will be ready for presentation to the directors at their regular meeting next Friday, it is not contemplated that they will be asked to vote upon it then.

There are two reasons. Legal details have not been completed and Frederick H. Prince, Boston capitalist and chairman of the company's finance committee, is still abroad.

Although Mr. Prince has not formally endorsed the plan due to his absence from this country, little difficulty is expected in securing his assent.

Organized on the basis that all the stockholders must sacrifice something in order that the company might write off approximately $70,000,000 of assets mostly idle and obsolete properties—the readjustment is designed to put the packing concern in a position where it can immediately resume dividends on its Illinois preferred in arrears since 1930, and pay something on the common in the near future.

It is proposed to exchange the $57,231,300 of 7 per cent cumulative Illinois preferred into a like amount of convertible cumulative preferred carrying a dividend rate of 6 per cent.

SOVIET GETS SOCONY ORDER

By Associated Press

New York, May 16 (AP)—The Socony-Vacuum Corp. has reached an agreement with the Soviet government for the purchase of some 500,000 barrels of oil products, valued at about $1,000,000, for distribution in the Near East, it was learned today.

The purchase was said by officials of the Socony-Vacuum Corp. to be "a normal continuation of business relations" with Soviet Russian oil interests.

The company always has bought its supplies for the Near East either in Rumania or in Russia, it was pointed out, and the Russians had not been in the market as sellers for some time.

Significance was attached to the deal in local oil circles, however, as marking the resumption of trade relations between the Socony-Vacuum and the Soviet after a two-ylear lapse.

It was said there was nothing in the purchase agreement regarding the extension of credits in this country since the oil was paid for on the basis of British currency. It was expected, however, that some of the proceeds might be used by Russia for purchases in this country.

BUSINESS MEN ACT BEARISHLY, SAYS FORBES

Financial Leaders Are Warned Against Too Much Gloom

By B. C. FORBES

Most financial leaders and many business leaders are acting too bearishly in my opinion.

Should their present attitude be carried much further, a national setback of serious moment might be suffered.

B. C. Forbes

True, federal legislators have lately shown scant regard for the many men of affairs who have been protesting against the handicaps imposed by the Securities Act and the bill to subject stock exchanges and much more important corporations to a new species of bureaucratic domination.

But, after all, it is the duty of every employer, of every responsible citizen, to make the best of unalterable facts and conditions, and to exert every effort to keep the country going in the right direction economically and employment-wise.

Some of the new rules decreed by politicians may not be to the liking of business, but both common sense and patriotism demand that the game be played manfully under whatever rules are prescribed by our law-making masters.

Once Congress adjourns, the probability is that President Roosevelt will manifest a distinctly co-operative attitude towards the business world, as he well knows that unless the business world acts with some measure of confidence, the nation's problem of problems, unemployment, cannot be solved.

After all, the responsibility of bringing about better times rests just as heavily upon business leaders as upon President Roosevelt. If things should not move in the right direction, they would suffer quite as much as he would.

It is ridiculous that this nation, with all that it possesses in men, resources, money, should much longer wallow in uncertainty and apprehension.

Tax-eaters, meaning the number of federal, state and local government employes, increased from 2,618,000 in 1922 to 3,122,000 in 1932, or 19.3 per cent, against a population increase of 13.6 per cent.

The sooner the nation reverses the multiplication of taxeating bureaucrats, the more hopeful and inspiring the future of America.

President Roosevelt's latest proposals to make money available for home improvements and to strengthen building and loan associations, represents a much wiser expenditure of public funds than do many other Washington innovations.

Construction is more likely to yield worthwhile results than destruction.

STOCK PRICES IRREGULAR AT CLOSE

New York, May 16—Stocks were generally irregular at the close of dull dealings on the New York Exchange today. The main body of issues fluctuated in a narrow range throughout the day.

Payment of the regular American Telephone dividend was offset by President Roosevelt's announcement in Wasington thta he favored the provisions of the drastic House stock exchange control bill.

The financial community was divided on what action the Telephone board would take and the stock, reflecting this, was easier in the early trading and then turned strong with the favorable dividend decision.

National Biscuit was an isolated weak spot, losing more than 2 points before meeting with support. The selling here was based on the reduction of the dividend to $2 annually from $2.80 previously.

United States Steel and other prime industrial stock leaders displayed little disposition to move out on either side of the list.

The commodity markets were generally erratic. Wheat after getting down more than a cent a bushel suddenly turned about and converted its loss into a 2 cent a bushel gain.

Coton was firm about 25 cents a bale over yesterday, while Silver steadied after early weakness.

Silver stocks notably United States Smelting were the only features of the day's trading. U. S. Smelting broke more than 5 points in light trading and then recovered in the final hour.

Stocks were generally firm in the first hour of trading with metal shares displaying the only downward tendency. U. S. Smelting dropped slightly more than a point. Howe Sound was a point lower. U. S. Steel eased a minor fraction. National Biscuit sagged over a point on news of a reduction in the common dividend.

Tobacco shares were strong with American Tobacco common and B issues gaining around 2 points each. Wright Aero soared more than 3 points on an odd lot transfer. United Aircraft was a major fraction higher. Chesapeake Corporation advanced more than a point.

A dribble of selling resulted in mild irregularity during the second hour. Du Pont yielded more than a point, while Chrysler and some of the other earlier steady spots eased slightly by noon.

Gains of moderate proportion were recorded by such issues as Atlantic Refining, Caterpillar Tractor, Continental Can, Corn Products, Crucible Steel, Devoe & Reynolds, Freeport Texas, Johns Manville, International Business Machines and St. Joseph's Lead. U. S. Steel preferred advanced a point.

Sales to noon approximated 270,000 shares.

The list turned mixed in the third hour, with some selling coming in the metal and chemical shares. Du Pont dropped 3 points. National Biscuit lose was extended to more than 2 points. U. S. Smelting showed a loss of well over 3 points.

Wright Aero was better than 4 points higher. Park & Tilford, American Tobacco common and B stocks were all up around 2 points. American Smelting, Howe Sound and Cerro De Pasco were a point or more lower. U. S. Steel was a major fraction lower.

Sales to 1 p. m. approximated 410,000 shares.

The list turned downward in the fourth hour despite the declaration of the regular $2.25 quarterly dividend by American Telephone. N. E. Telephone was down fractionally. U. S. Smelting dropped more than 4 points. Cerro De Pasco and American Smelting were down 2 or more points.

Recessions of a point or more appeared in American Can, Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, Air Reduction, Bethlehem Steel, Inland Steel and Westinghouse Airbrake. Western Union was down more than a point.

Sales to 2 p. m. approximated 500,000 shares.

LOW RATE ON SMALL LOANS

By Associated Press

New York, May 16—What appeared to be a new record in cheap credit was recorded in Wall Street today when small loans against stock exchange collateral were obtained for a full year at 1 per cent.

It was believed in the money market that this rate was the lowest ever established for security loans of a year's duration. Brokers had difficulty in recalling the last offering of money for 12 months and it was thought that such a long maturity had not appeared in the market for a number of years.

One of the large local banks made the offering, it was said, in an effort to employ some of its idle funds. Some of the offering was taken up by borrowers who felt the opportunity was to goood to miss.

National Biscuit Dividend Is Cut

New York, May 16—National Biscuit Co. declared quarterly dividend of 50 cents on the common stock, payable July 16 to stock of record June 15. Previously, quarterly dividend of 70 cents were paid on the common stock.

Francis New Head of Island Creek Coal

Directors of Island Creek Coal Co. elected James D. Francis president, and Thomas B. Davis chairman of the board. William H. Coolidge, who formerly was chairman, remains as chief counsel and a member of the board of directors and executive committee.

Mr. Francis, a lawyer by profession, has been connected with the company since 1918. The company states there will be no change in its policy or management, for Mr. Davis, the former president, and Mr. Francis will continue to work together as they have in the past. Mr. Francis is familiar with every phase of the company's activities and is today one of the best known figures in the bituminous industry.

Albert R. Beisel was elected vice-president and general manager and M. A. Donovan secretary and treasurer, the latter succeeding F. W. Batchelder, retired.

Pond Creek Pocahontas Co., management of which is practically identical with that of Island Creek Coal Co., elected the same chairman, president and secretary-treasurer. Raymond E. Salvati was elected vice-president and general manager.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

LAWRENCE SHAW
National Director

By L. F. ROSS
Boston Wing Commander

Greetings, members! We are receiving some interesting letters from Junior Birdmen and Junior Birdwomen. Many of them discuss the coming contests, proposed activities for their squadrons and their delight in receiving their wings and membership cards.

Here is what Christina Kennedy, 16, of 270 Dorchester ave., South Boston has to say:

"I was honestly surprised when I found I was one of those who got Honorable Mention in the Motto Contest. I never came near winning anything before, so maybe I may win the next contest I enter.

"I'm glad that Dorothy Connor won, because that helps keep Southy on the map—if you know what I mean. I do not know her personally but our houses are not far apart and I'm sure this contest is introduction enough. I am trying to get 19 others to form a squadron. Thanks to all the persons who acted as judges. I'm sure they chose the best."

Betty Johnson, 15, of Aaron st., Framingham, writes:

"When I receive my membership card I will send in my 20 members to form a squadron. Would it be all right to vote (between my club members) and choose a name for our club? We have been busy reading airplane books and cutting out pictures to hang in our clubrooms."

(Yes, you can call your squadron any name you desire.)

Details of Motto Winners' Trip Almost Complete

Nearly the entire program for the week-end trip to New York and back for the four New England winners of the motto contest has been completed.

The winners are Dorothy L. Connor, 85 Baxter st., South Boston; Albert Meryman, 514 Shirley st., Winthrop; Jean Hill, 443 Merrimac st., Newburyport, and Jack Strain, 206 Suffolk ave., Revere.

The party will leave Boston Friday afternoon, May 25, on the 5:15 Gray Line bus for Providence. There they will board a steamer of the Colonial Navigation Co., and spend the night, arriving in New York Saturday morning. After breakfast at Hotel Warwick they will enter a deluxe glass top sightseeing bus and make a tour from 9 until 12, seeing such sights as the famous Tombs Prison, George Washington Bridge across the Hudson, the Brooklyn Bridge, Library, Foreign Embassies, the Ghetto, Chinatown, famous hotels and skyscrapers, colleges, Central Park, Riverside Drive, Fifth Ave., and internationally known museums.

They will arrive at the transatlantic liner "Bremen" at 12 o'clock for lunch and a tour of inspection with the captain. Leaving the boat at 2 o'clock they will go to Battery Park where they will board a sightseeing boat which will take them to the famous Statue of Liberty and spend a full hour within this national shrine.

At 4 o'clock they will board another boat which will take them to the world's most noted amusement center—Coney Island. Arriving there at 5 o'clock they will be taken immediately to the Half Moon Hotel for dinner. After dinner they will see the sights of Coney Island at night, walk the famous boardwalk and be the guests of Steeplechase, the funniest place in the world. At midnight they will go back to the Half Moon Hotel to stay for the night. This is one of the finest summer resort hotels in the country.

The next morning, after breakfast, they will leave for New York City and, upon arriving at Battery Park, will visit the famous aquarium where they will see fish from all parts of the world. They will then be given the thrill of a ride in a New York subway and will be taken back to the hotel in time for lunch. After lunch, they will probably go to a theatre.

The party will board the Colonial Navigation Co.'s steamer at 6 p. m. Sunday for the return trip again spending the night on the water and arriving at Providence where they will change to the Gray Line bus which will bring them to Boston at 8 o'clock Monday morning, May 28.

Happy Landings!

MILLEN TRIAL TIPSTERS IN $50 SPLIT

By THE NEWS TIP EDITOR

Two big tips this week gave me a rather hard time choosing between them for the major prize until I decided that in order to be fair to both I had better split the $50.

David Davis, Washington st., West Roxbury, and a man who wished his name withheld are the two lucky tipsters. Davis sent in the tip on attempted break of Irving Millen from the Dedham jail, and the other man paved the way for special pictures in the Millen case.

Checks of $25 each will be mailed to them.

HOLDUP TIP GETS $10

Benjamin Ellis, Beacon st., Brookline, sent in the tip on the American Oil Company hold-up in Cambridge and for his promptness he will receive a check for $10.

A check for $5 is being sent to Nathan Miller, Parker st., Malden who furnished first information about the explosion of the theory that athletes live a shorter life than non-athletes.

Three dollar checks were awarded the following:

Norman Crum, Providence, R. I. Tip on fire.

George Bates, Medford. Tip on police chasing auto thieves.

H. W. Buckley, Manchester, N. H. Tip on Amoskeag Mill strike.

Frank Tierney, of Charlestown, and Edward Denalt, Roxbury, will receive checks for $2. Tierney sent the tip on the Charlestown speeders and Denalt a tip on a boy killed in Roxbury after a wild ride on a runaway horse and team.

Nineteen were awarded $1 checks for tips this week. It was a hard task picking these winners. Those who failed to receive a prize this week keep up your courage. Your time may be next week.

The $1 list of winners are:

P. L. Andrews, Salem. Tip on Salem fire.

Mrs. C. Byrne, Winthrop Highlands. Tip on Winthrop fire.

Mrs. J. Langbon, Boston. Tip on students cleaning statue.

William Skorsky, Chelsea. Tip on auto accident.

Albert Lind, Boston. Tip on woman being attacked.

Mrs. Joseph Murray, Dorchester. Tip on insane man's arrest.

Mary Gentile, Woburn. Tip on Woburn fire.

Edna M. Perry, Swampscott. Tip on auto crash.

H. E. Robinson, Watertown. Tip on auto crash.

John Mentz, Belmont. Tip on auto crash.

Lillian Gray, Roxbury. Tip on fire.

John Walsh, Roxbury. Tip on boy falling into Muddy River.

Mary A. McMaster, Taunton. Tip on forest fire.

Benjamin Litsky, Brookline. Tip on car backing down hill.

Vincent Sena, Somerville. Tip on attempted suicide.

Russell Downs, Boston. Tip on strike of West End bakers.

Mack Margulis, Dorchester. Tip on man being found dead.

Remember phone in your tips to the News Tip Editor at Liberty 4000. Promptness counts.

Jury Acquits Son of Billy Sunday

Los Angeles, May 16 (AP)—Paul Thompson Sunday, son of the evangelist, Billy Sunday, stood acquitted today of a charge of being drunk in a motor car. He was freed last night after a jury had deliberated for six hours. Sunday was tried on the same charge last month, but the jury disagreed after standing 10 to 2 for conviction.

B. & M. to Issue $1,550,000 Notes

Washington, May 16—The Boston & Maine railroad has received interstate commerce commission authorization to issue $1,550,000 of 4 per cent notes to be sold to the public works administration. The money is to be used for maintenance of the company's properties.

First Radio Free-for-All Will Be Some Party

By N. F. T.

Good old conservative WEEI, as the station personnel doesn't mind said Hub ozone outlet being referred to now and then, is literally going off the deep end in a production dive that is nothing if not decidedly different. It's rather a new idea and while difficult to imagine, they say Charley Burton cooked it up for a tryout; he being the broadcasting boss there.

This evening at 6:45, everyone in the studio, visitors included, will take part in a vocal ensemble offering. That is, if they want to lend a voice. Indeed, the very announcement may result in calling out a riot squad to handle the throngs, as eager to sing are so many people.

Charles Burton

Informality is the keynote. Such songs as "Moonlight Bay" and "Put on Your Old Grey Bonnet" have been picked as two of the pieces, mainly for the reason that "Almost Everybody Knows Them" and they seem just the type of tune during which even the most bashful would-be baritone or self-conscious soprano doesn't hesitate to almost tear a tonsil.

WHAT—NO AUDITION?

Jovial but dignified Jim MacDonald, energetic WEEI staff member, insists the above whole business is definitely a Burton brain child. Jim seriously adds the thought that here is "something novel with a subtly practical aspect," and then also has the facetious audacity to suggest there might even be a chance for this radio reporter to contribute a half chorus or two. If he had said Burton would be there bellowing up in front, the temptation to "join in" might take hold.

On second thought, the humorous prospect of hearing what happens from some outside listening post appeals to a very much greater degree. Should the station transmitting equipment by any chance be blasted off the air—that would furnish a not too tough news story to phone the city editor about.

Among musical "mike" doings easy on the ears locally, the string group arrangements and romantic Portuguese ballad singing by Frank Machado is recommended (WAAB) as of 8:30 tonight, along Yankee Network waves.

BEEHIVE BEHAVIOR

Down Washington way today, the Bureau of Entomology is staging a discussion on the subject of bees, bumble and otherwise. This discourse also goes on the air (WNAC) between 4:30 and 5 o'clock, with a swarm of real live bees turned loose in the studio to buzz for the broadcast. Announcers at WJSV are reported unwilling to introduce the program. They no doubt fear the Big Bee Glee Club might break out with "It Don't Mean a Thing if it ain't got that Sting" and not many can blame them.

Joan Field, pretty 17-year-old New Jersey village girl, plays her premiere program as a guest artist with the celebrated Albert Spaulding tonight (WNAC) at 10:30 and will interpret the famous "Londonderry Air" on her violin.

SCARY SOUNDS

There's some cold shivers for the surface of your spine waiting if you are easily affected by thriller stuff. Hair raising, nerve jolting and other sensational reactions are predicted by the program planners who put on the "Crime Clue" ether episode tonight (WBZ) at 8 o'clock. No wonder, the skit bears "The Man from the Morgue" for a title—whew!

News of Port of Boston

By WILLIAM F. MAGUIRE

Down in the office of Clarence C. Doane, pilot agent, Long Wharf, today a gloom, thicker than yesterday's fog, hung over the office. Across the bay, tied up at National Wharf, was a friend. It was a ship, the Liberty, on which pilots have lived for 38 years waiting to meet foreign steamers.

A few of the pilots stood, looking out the windows. What their thoughts were I wanted to find out.

So I asked four of the group, men hardened by years on the sea, what the "gloom" was all about.

Here is what Captain Roswell Y. Woodbury, 64, of Longwood ave., Brookline, the oldest of the group who has been on the high seas since a boy of 14, said:

"I have lived on and off that ship for 38 years. It's like a brother to us men. Today she was taken away from us because her useful days are over. She is over there now, waiting to be sold. Gee, I hate to see her go."

Three other Captains, H. W Folger, 60, of Squantum rd., Quincy, Waldo B. Merritt, 61, of 271 Fellsway East, Malden; and W H. Lewis, 52, of Prospect ave., Wollaston, buddies since 17, all told the same story.

HERE'S HELP FOR YOU!

IF YOU must be on the job every day, here's a medicine you ought to know about. Little chocolate coated tablets which bring welcome relief from "women's troubles." Purse size, 50 cents.

"I am 27 and a textile winder in the mill. I had cramps so bad that I had to cry many times. I used to stay in bed two days a month. Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets helped me wonderfully. For the first time in my life I do not suffer. I can work all the time now and feel strong. I used to be rundown and nervous and couldn't eat. Now I eat more than I ever did". — Mrs. Bennie Coates, 1963 Terrace Street, Muskegon, Mich.

"I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Medicine to everyone. I was rundown and tired and had pains in my stomach and was irregular. Your Tablets proved wonders to me." — Mrs. Fred Bachmann, 1023 So. 2nd Street, La Crosse, Wisconsin.

Try this medicine yourself. You will be pleased with the results.

Liner Rescues Military Plane

New York, May 16—The Mackay Radio Corp., announced it had received wireless messages from the United States liner Washington stating the crew of an airplane had been rescued in the North Sea.

The plane, the FX 383, the message stated, was believed to be a military one and lighted in distress not far off the British coast from Dover.

The
to TELL 'EM and SELL 'EM

THE RATIO of sales to calls may vary with circumstances, but it's pretty constant as a general average. This only goes to show that persistency — the formal name for stick-to-it-iveness — is still a fundamental of salesmanship.

As the next best thing to a personal call, consider the telephone toll call. You know your customer: if he'll see you in person, he'll talk to you by telephone. Intimate give-and-take is possible because, figuratively, you are sitting in his office.

Remember—your customer is as near as your telephone; sales arguments are as true over a wire as across a desk; telephone sales count as much as personal sales — and cost less.

We have consultants of wide experience. They can tell whether what you want to sell or to buy can be effectively handled by toll service. Their advice is yours for the asking. Call the Telephone Manager.

And, bear in mind these low rates for a 3-minute daytime number call: 25 miles for 25 cents; 64 miles at a 50 cent rate; 174 miles at a dollar rate. Lower rates for evening and night calls, and no tax on calls of less than 50 cents.

Class Benefits Imperil American Liberties, Warns W. R. Hearst

Democracy, according to Thomas Jefferson, founder of the Democratic party, is government for the greatest good of the greatest number.

It is more than that. It is government for the greatest benefit of the WHOLE PEOPLE, government for the equal advantage of ALL CLASSES, ALL SECTS, ALL SECTIONS; government for the equal good of ALL CITIZENS.

Mr. Hearst recently wrote the following letter in reply to a request from Mr. Brisbane for comment by Mr. Hearst on the inequalities of tax conditions and the injustice which the discriminatory policies of the New Deal imposed upon certain groups, as distinguished from other groups or the whole body of American citizenship.

Said Mr. Hearst:

> It is the fundamental guaranty of his rights and liberties.
> As soon as discrimination is introduced, it leads eventually and inevitably to discrimination in favor of the big fellow and against the little fellow.
> It may not start this way but it ends this way, and the only safeguard against discrimination against the little fellow is freedom from discrimination.
> This is what our fathers realized when they established this republic.
> They established it to obtain freedom from the discrimination under which they had been suffering.
> They established it to abolish caste and class and special privilege.
> They established it to create liberty and equality—equality of rights, equality of privileges, equality of opportunities, equality of obligations.
> You cannot have the benefits of equality unless you have equality.
> You cannot discriminate in favor of one class or against one class and have equality.
> You cannot have unequal privileges and unequal obligations, and maintain a government based on equal rights.
> If we want to surrender the ideals of our fathers and go back to the unequal systems which they founded this republic to avoid, we have the right to do so; but we should realize what we are doing.
> We must realize that we are attributing failure to what is universally recognized as the greatest success politically and economically in the world.
> We must realize that we are not going forward but backward.
> We are not adopting new systems but returning to old, discredited and discarded systems.
> Both Communism and Fascism are government by caste and class.
> Both Communism and Fascism mean the abolition of liberty—political and individual, and the substitution of despotism.
> They mean the end of freedom—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of thought, freedom of action.
> When the torch of liberty is extinguished, our era of enlightenment is ended, and we return to the dark ages of force and fear.
> All the progress our fathers dreamed of, and all that we have achieved, are based on the democratic principle of equality.
> That is the keystone of the arch; and if we remove it, the whole structure of our democracy crashes to the ground.
> WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST."

The accompanying editorial is based upon a telegraphic letter from William Randolph Hearst to Arthur Brisbane, which appeared in the Hearst newspapers on May 4 and which is now quoted in these columns. When the letter was originally published, Dr. George J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education of New York City, sent the following telegram to Mr. Hearst:

"In Friday's New York American I read your birthday telegram to Mr. Arthur Brisbane. May I say that this is one of the finest expressions of the American doctrine that I have ever read and that I am hopeful it will have the widest possible publication. For simplicity of style, clarity and brevity I do not recall having read a better statement of the things for which we Americans stand and which we are endeavoring to inculcate in the 1,250,000 children in the public schools of New York City. Many congratulations."

This truth cannot be too much emphasized.

Every discrimination made in favor of one class of citizens and against another constitutes a precedent which is not only a violation of the democratic principle of equality, but an encouragement of further violations by subsequent administrations.

The radical administrations which discriminate in favor of one class are establishing precedents which a reactionary administration will use to discriminate in favor of a different class.

And in the end, democratic equality will disappear. Government of unjust discrimination will be substituted for the government conceived by our fathers of equal rights and equal liberties.

We behold on every hand the results of the current ardor for spoliation — the "soak-the-thrifty" campaign so noisily sounded in Congressional speeches.

The obvious arrest of recovery, the palpable decline of business initiative, the stagnation of capital's flow into productive enterprise, the natural and inevitable shrinkage of employment at a much faster rate than the government by artificial means can create it—all attest the profound truth that the effects of unequal treatment before the law are not confined to the classes against which so mistaken a policy is aimed, but envelop the little fellow as well in the evil consequences of governmental discrimination in place of upright impartiality.

Citing the fathers of the republic, Mr. Hearst declared, "They established it (equality before the law) to obtain freedom from the discrimination under which they had been suffering; to abolish caste and class and special privilege; to create equality of rights, equality of privileges, equality of opportunities, equality of obligations."

"You cannot discriminate," said he, "in favor of one class or against one class and have equality. You cannot have unequal privileges and unequal obligations and maintain a government based on equal rights."

The letter of Mr. Hearst well deserves careful reading. It carries a timely warning which must be heeded if we are to survive as a great democratic republic.

He touched upon the fact, now becoming more clearly recognized each day, that many of the new measures which have been so hastily adopted do not mark progress, but are clearly retrogressive and reactionary.

"We are not adopting new systems," said Mr. Hearst, "but returning to old, discredited and discarded systems."

The mingled elements of Communism and Fascism which many of the new measures present, mean the "abolition of liberty," as Mr. Hearst declares—"political and individual, and the substitution of despotism."

The loss is threatened of every hard-won immunity and security, which have been regarded as constituting American liberty, including the freedom of speech, of the press, of thought, and of action.

"When the torch of liberty is extinguished," says Mr. Hearst, "our era of enlightenment is ended, and we return to the dark ages of force and fear."

PROFOUND WISDOM IS THIS! WHO SHALL GAINSAY ITS TRUTH?

Can such warnings, supported by our history and confirmed by our instincts as a people, be disregarded?

It is high time we stopped attributing failure to America—to what, as Mr. Hearst reminds us, "is universally recognized as the greatest success politically and economically in the world."

Such reflections as these are coming rapidly to the surface of American thought. They are broader than all party lines. They are the basic, deep-lodged and permanent convictions of America.

The shallows murmur, while the deep is still—STILL in the sense in which the deeper thought of the country is outdinned by the clamors at the surface, but NOT STILL in the sense that it is motionless.

Far from it. The depths of American thinking and American purpose and American conviction are stirring.

The irresponsible innovators, now so blithely disfiguring the fair aspect of American life, will soon be overtaken—and disposed of by the oncoming forces of sanity, sobriety and genuine devotion to American principles and ideals.

Listen World!

By Elsie Robinson

SHE'S AS GOOD AS HER MOTHER WAS.

WHY ISN'T THAT GOOD ENOUGH?

This is the true story of Elizabeth Edwards. It is also the story of thousands of other loyal, loving, hard-working wives who, in spite of their best efforts, aren't making the grade. Actually, it's the story of a changing world, and what the change is doing to women. As such, it's Important History. Listen in!

Elsie Robinson

Betty Edwards is thirty-seven—pretty, kindly, sensible, a capable wife and mother of the "old school." Meaning that Betty grew up as Nice Young Girls had grown up for thousands of years before. Not much money, but plenty of old-fashioned comfort.

When Betty finished Hi, she helped around home with Mother. A Nice Girl wouldn't have dreamed of working in those days—unless maybe it was school teaching. So nineteen happy, carefree years passed—then Betty met and married Dan.

Dan's one wish was that Betty should become just such a wife and mother as his own mother was. And she has. Today Betty's a grand cook, makes all the youngsters' clothes, loves to have company drop in, boasts that she "hasn't a thought outside her home." Yet, for some mysterious reason, Dan's discontented.

He'll hardly admit it to himself; despises himself whenever the feeling gets the best of him. Yet there it is! Why? WHY? Why does Betty "get in his hair?"

Sitting across from Betty of an evening, Dan wonders some more. He wouldn't—he swears he wouldn't—give one of Betty's little fingers for the whole outfit of office women. She's a grand girl! He can never be grateful enough for all she's done. And yet—

Why is it that Betty—that all home women—are so different from working women?

Betty isn't hard to look at. Of course, she isn't much for dressing any more. But then, as she laughingly explains, that doesn't really matter, around the house. And then it cost so much for the girls! But it isn't just the dressing.

Other little things. He's a cad to even notice them, but they certainly get his goat. The slow way she moves. Taking everything so easy. Never quite on time. ("But what does it matter, darling, if I'm a few minutes late. Honest, Dan you oughta slow down, yourself. It's awful to let yourself get all nerved up the way you are lately").

But that isn't the worst. It's the dullness. Mi-gosh, how dull a home is, after the office! Unless somebody comes in for bridge, what's there to do?

Betty says, "It's fun, just us two alone, darling. Here's my chance to give myself a good cold creaming and read that new serial. Wonder if she really is going off with that fellow?"

Maybe Betty's right. Maybe he ought to be content, quiet nights like that. Sitting about the children, night after night—maybe that should be enough. But it isn't.

Things are so exciting, nowadays! Down at the office, everybody wondering about the NRA. Always an argument going on about something. These new codes. The latest strike. Rough stuff they're pulling over in Germany. Funny that you can't have talks like that at home. But you can't. Betty doesn't care for stuff like that. Doesn't even know it's happening!

Fierce—the way a fellow feels let down when he comes back to a perfectly nice home! Maybe that's why some fellows quit—go off with some snappy little number.

"Not," says Dan to himself, roughly, "that I'd ever do a thing like that. I'm crazy about Betty. Really crazy. Of course, Sue's an interesting girl; helps me a lot in my work. Wonderful how a girl like Sue understands. But that's just business.

"Not a thing to it when we work together evenings. What's wrong in getting a bite together, when we got a lot of work to do? Betty shouldn't get burned up over a thing like that. She oughta know I wouldn't even look at another woman. I'm not that kind of a fellow."

But do home women have to be like this—just because their mothers were? Can't they snap out of it; be as modern as business women?

Well—must they, or mustn't they? Can they, or can't they? What's YOUR answer?

Human Side of the News -:- By Edwin C. Hill

Nothing in the news is more astonishing than the mobbing of Mahatma Gandhi by Hindus who had been among his own followers. At Buxar, in India, he narrowly escaped a bad beating and serious injury which might, for one of his frail physique, have resulted in death. The mob was venting its hostility to Gandhi's pet project of freeing the untouchables, the lowest of all castes in that land of castes, India.

Hurt and humiliated, the Mahatma told his intimates that if the Hindus generally were against his reforms he would drop them. And so he seems to be fading out of the picture, this extraordinary little man who, only a year or so ago, was nothing less than ninety-five pounds of dynamite ready to blow up the whole British Empire in the Far East.

Why has he failed, or seems to have failed, in overcoming the traditions of thousands of years that have bound his people to their caste system as the feet of Chinese women are bound from babyhood? There are two main causes. One is the subtle resistance of the priesthood of the Brahmin faith. The other is the powerful influence against him of the kings and princes of the native states. These gentlemen, ruling in the last stronghold of despotism, have never had much use for Ganthi, not even the Hindu princes.

DETESTED BY RAJAHS

The Mohammedan rajahs detest him and all his works. And practically all of them are strong for the continuance of British rule in India. Nowhere in the world do monarchs enjoy such power, such luxury and splendor as in these native states of India. The largest and richest of all these states is Hyderabad. Its picturesque ruler, the Nizam, might have stepped out of the Old Testament.

Through his roads the lumbering elephant still carries the veiled and sheltered Mohammedan lady, swathed to her brooding eyes in draperies of silk or fine cotton. The supercilious camel plods along, sneering at all mankind, as is his way, as he sneered at Abraham and Isaac, the Queen of Sheba, Mohammed and Napoleon. Beggars infest the long, broad, white-dust roads, whining in the traffic. In the unroofed mosques the faithful kneel and bow their heads toward the east, toward Mecca.

And here in his capital of Hyderabad, the Nizam, the richest man in the world, so rich, indeed, that he could buy and sell Mr. Andrew Mellon or Mr. Henry Ford, maintains his gorgeous court. Through his marble halls passes a strange and glittering pageant of life. Magistrates, rich merchants, nobles, black-bearded soldiers.

In this palace of marble floors, gold inlaid walls and jewel-studded couches, the Nizam watches his graceful dancing girls, slim as golden lilies. In a great red and gold room, he attends to the business of his state and dictates his will to fourteen million people. When he dines, he eats from plates of solid gold and he drinks his wine from golden goblets. And about his whole existence and the atmosphere of his gorgeous palace is a perceptible flavor of the Arabian Nights.

One looks, indeed, for Scheherazade when one glimpses through the latticed windows of the women's quarters, the questing dark eyes that follow with intense curiosity the movements of the Nizam's visitors. In these women's quarters, the wives and favorites of His Royal Highness drowse away the hours in silken and brocaded luxury, inhaling the scent of mimosa and jasmine, smoking perfumed tobacco in water-pipes, drinking perfumed coffee, their whole existence an exotic perfume, unreal, artificial, scarcely human.

Huge women guards, Amazons, are the palace jailers of these women, and their principal duty is to prevent any word or piece of writing from being surreptitiously given to a visitor. As for the Nizam's riches, it is only necessary to recall that he inherited a vast treasure which had been accumulated by his predecessors for centuries, the loot of war and the spoil of a people, and to this he has been adding all his life.

It is a common sight to see wagonloads of gold and silver in his courtyard, on their way to his treasury. He is probably the only man in the world who is actually a billionaire.

There will be nudists abroad in no less than 18 states this summer, so we find in the news. Certainly, one excellent reason for congratulating the other 30. For the objection to the nudist cult is not on the score of immorality, but squarely on the ground of good taste.

The matter is aesthetic, rather than ethical. The fact of the matter is there is rarely anything beautiful about the human body, the average, run of the mill, human body. There are too many protuberant stomachs, too many bowed and bandied legs, too many knotting and bony knees, far too many other unsightly defects to establish much of a standard for beauty in the modern human race, a race which has almost forgotten what made beauty, use of the outdoors, as the Greeks used the outdoors and which hires men to play for it instead of doing its playing itself.

But the cult of nudity is undoubtedly increasing, just as any fad seems to be able to spread in this fad-loving country of ours. There are said to be a hundred and fifty thousand nudists in the country, and there is even an official nudist magazine.

Its managing editor, the Rev. Ilsley Bone, who does his managing-editing clothed only in the skin that Nature gave him, says there will be a million in another year. Maybe so. But there are certain reasons why one doubts it. The woman doesn't live and breathe who doesn't like to wear pretty clothes, and even if they are not pretty, there is some strange and kindly magic of the gods which transmutes her vision and makes them, to her at least, seem pretty. Will the ladies give up their fine fixings—Jamais, as we say in that dear Paris.

Two other reasons are frost and sun. The human hide is not suited to complete and continual exposure to American winters and American summers. And there is an innate shyness in most people which, in the end, will baffle all this nudist faddism.

THE PERFECT HUSBAND

There is a husband all complete
  Who keeps his raiment neatly pressed,
And when he sits him down to eat
  He spills no gravy on his vest.

He has no little faults like mine;
  At least they undiscovered lie.
His conversations, when we dine,
  Is never tediously dry.

He dances all the ladies round,
  I'm told, in such a graceful way.
I often wonder how he's found
  The time to earn his weekly pay.

He says the countless pretty things
  I sometimes think, but never speak.
The ladies love him when he sings.
  In music I admit I'm weak.

My Nellie often says to me:
  (I'm sure it's just a passing whim)
That very happy she would be
  If I could more resemble him.

And I reply: "If that were so
  And just as he I'd live my life,
My list of faults you'd never know,
  For I'd be married to his wife."

College Seminars Show Way to Reform

By James T. Williams, Jr.

How the evils of county government can be eradicated and the standard of state administration improved will be one of the main subjects of study and discussion at the institute of public affairs which the University of Virginia will hold next July.

Leading the discussion on county government and state administration will be a recognized authority in this field—George W. Speicer of the political science faculty of the university of which Thomas Jefferson was the father. Professor Speicer performed a similar service recently for the University of Chattanooga at its institute of justice, which was attended by representative citizens of Tennessee and nearby states.

COUNTY RESTRICTION URGED

These institutes, held in many parts of the Union under the auspices of universities and colleges, are doing much to stimulate the interest and inform the intelligence of the people regarding the problems of government. They are providing a leadership in public education, in regard to public affairs, which is a witness to the faith of Jefferson in the honesty of the people, to his respect for their common sense, to his confidence that "by education their ignorance can be eliminated."

Dr. John A. Fairlie, professor of political science at the University of Illinois, and Dr. Charles M. Kneier, associate professor of political science at the University of Nebraska, are the authors of one of the most comprehensive studies yet published on county government in the several states. Another pioneer in the exploration of "the dark continent of American politics," as county government has been well described, is Dr. Thomas H. Reed, professor of political science at the University of Michigan.

"The first and most important step which the legislatures can take toward modernizing the areas of local government," declares Professor Reed, "is to propose amendments removing constitutional barriers to the consolidation of counties and school districts and the abolition of counties.

HOME RULE CHARTERS

"These amendments might take the form of authorizing optional legislative acts dealing freely with the whole structure of local government, or they might provide for home-rule charters for counties, combinations of counties, or metropolitan areas.

"They should contain provisions protecting the reasonable rights of minorities so that the people of a county could be empowered to abolish their townships, consolidate their school districts, modernize the machinery of county government, and combine with cities or other counties in larger and better organized units.

"That such measures can be passed without resistance is not to be expected. Local officeholders will fight to the death to block them, but he who fights for them will have behind him a solid phalanx of weary, angry and hopeful taxpayers."

There is every reason for the people to welcome the leadership of institutions of higher learning in organizing to lift from their necks the yoke of ox-cart government, of which the county unit is the most flagrant example.

Taxes wrung from the people to support more than 3000 county governments and the other thousands of smaller government units are urgently needed for other and better purposes. Public education is suffering for lack of funds. Public protection is ham-strung by insufficient appropriations. Public health and other vital governmental services are being starved to pay for the upkeep of thousands upon thousands of county and local officers no longer required for the orderly transaction of public business.

To simplify these government units will require a constitutional change in a majority of the states, but legislative enactments in nearly all the states can provide some relief.

AN EXAMPLE TO FOLLOW

In the following states the Constitution specifically authorizes the legislatures to consolidate counties: Georgia, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Virginia.

If every state university would follow the example this summer of the University of Virginia and make the modernizing of county government a foremost subject of study and discussion at an institute of public affairs, the people would soon vindicate the faith of Thomas Jefferson in their honesty and common sense by electing legislatures pledged to raise the standard of state administration by bringing our obsolete system of county and local government up to date.
